Walk for Water brings in $10,000 for development

by ED WHITE

Staff Reporter

On Saturday they walked for water — and walked and walked and walked. Sixteen kilometers around Lake Kashagawigamog and past occasional check-points over 70 members of Help A Village Effort (H.A.V.E.) walked to raise money for the organization's efforts to bring running water to villages in the developing world.

Members collected pledges in the weeks prior to the event, and altogether they raised over $10,000.

The locally-based group helps villages in the developing world to dig wells and put in water pipelines, as well as other small projects.

After collecting at the Band Shell in Head Lake Park a large group of people, some with placards, some on bikes, some in baby carriages, followed a Legion pipe band to the high school, from where they began walking down the hot asphalt of Highway 121, under a clear blue sky and with a slight wind to cool them.

Families, seniors, students and people from across the region set out on the path, holding their pledge sheets and getting them stamped at each check-point on the way.

Dehydrated walkers slaked their thirsts on oranges and cold water at the check-points. and some relaxed in the shade of trees, before getting back on the road for OFF TO A PIPING START: The main pack of walkers heads off on the 16 kilometre walk around Lake Kashagawigamog, led by pipers from the Legion. Around 80 people took part in the walk, and between them raised $10,000. People had many reasons for participating, but all were united in a willingness to strive both physically and mentally for developing nations, where for millions of people a glass of clean water is just a dream. This is the eighth year of the event and the money raised will pay for water projects in Africa and Asia.

Sunday shopping law little threat: politicians

by ED WHITE

Staff Reporter

Haliburton has little to fear from the provincial government's proposed changes to Sunday shopping laws, say a Dysart councillor and two reeves of municipalities.

But M.P.P. Dennis Drainville will not comment on the bill yet, saying he does not want to offer just speculations. He says he will offer more concrete information as soon as the bill passes.

The proposed changes to the Retail Business Holidays Act, expected to be passed in the next two weeks, would make it harder for areas to exempt themselves from Sunday shopping laws. Until now municipalities have had the right to designate themselves as tourist areas, allowing retail businesses to stay open on Sundays, but the new legislation would take that power out of the hands of local government and turn it over to the province.

Dysart et al Reeve Bill Davis says he has no doubt Haliburton County will be designated as a tourist area. And he thinks it is good the province is making the decisions.

"The problem was the government was putting the responsibility on municipalities. Peterson got out of the heat in the kitchen (about Sunday shopping) by transferring the decision to the municipalities," says Davis.

Anson, Hindon and Minden Deputy-Reeve Bern Berry says he is sure his municipality will be designated a tourist zone, and would be very surprised if there were any changes to the present situation, where Minden retail outlets may remain open Sundays.

"You'd think they'd ask people's opinions before they went and changed anything big. This is an NDP government which is supposed to listen to the people," says Berry. "If there was going to be a big change you'd think they'd have a forum or a discussion."

Dysart counillor Murray Fearrey says he is sure Haliburton will be designated a tourist zone.

Davis says he is sure the legislation is intended to cut down on Sunday shopping in other parts of the province. "Border towns open on Sundays for different reasons. It's to stop cross border shopping. If Windsor calls itself a tourist town, well that's a gray area. You're splitting some pretty fine hairs.

"There's not a doubt in anyone's mind that this is a tourist area."

Zero increase in Glamorgan 1991 budget

by ED WHITE

Staff Reporter

In an era of ever-increasing deficits and government debts, Glamorgan Council's zero increase in municipal spending is a nice surprise.

"We couldn't have cut it down any more," said Councillor Beverley MacDuff at the May 21 meeting.

The budget does contain an overall 8.73 per cent increase in spending, but this is due to a 35 per cent increase in the county levy, and increases in both elementary and secondary schools demands.

Special projects are still going ahead.

The municipal portion is actually decreasing by 0.19 per cent.

Deputy-Reeve Glen Madill says the municipality has been able to avoid an increase because of extra revenue from development. Many of the major projects which the township is undertaking are covered by reserve funds set up over the last few years.

Special projects this year include building a roofed pavilion in Glamorgan Township Park, building a new bay on the fire hall for an emergency response vehicle, and rebuilding the boundary road between Glamorgan and Monmouth municipalities.

Clerk Elva Bates says the boundary road project is going ahead because the provincial government is giving both Glamorgan and Monmouth $30,000 towards it. "Naturally council has to go ahead with what it can get the funding for."

She says other projects the council was hoping to carry out will have to wait until council has the money for them.

MPP Dennis Drainville gestures a point in Cardiff

Citizens can save Canada, MPP says

by BRIAN RODNICK

Staff Reporter

The future of Canada rests entirely in the hands of its citizens, was the message Saturday in Cardiff, at an NDP sponsored forum to discuss national unity.

Approximately 50 people turned out to the Cardiff Elementary School to hear Victoria-Haliburton MPP Dennis Drainville and Cathy Vainio, a former federal New Democrat candidate, address the issue of national unity.

"Quebec separation is a minor issue," said Drainville in his address, comparing it to the political, social and economic restructuring which he feels are necessary to keep Canada united.

"No one provincial government should be more important than another," he said. "The federal government shouldn't go out on its own. We should work very much like a family."

Renewed emphasis on human values is what's needed at the forefront of Canada's social restructuring, he suggested, starting with the equality of its people; "so every human has the opportunity to use the resources and share the life we have as Canadians." This includes a re-examination of aboriginal rights; "who've suffered years of discrimination and cultural genocide."

Economically, Drainville wants the free trade agreement disbanded, calling for more money to go into research and development to

Chamber on road to seek donations

by ED WHITE

Staff Reporter

The Haliburton Highlands Chamber of Commerce is joining the national trend set by Keith Spicer and his national forum by talking directly to the people it represents.

"As directors of the Chamber we have to look out for the needs of the members, and that means going on the road," says Rhonda Elstone.

The Chamber is trying to cope with the 50 per cent funding slash the county dealt them in this year's budget, and Elstone says "we have to find some way to get more funding. We need money to pay staff and keep operating."

She and the other directors of the Chamber will individually visit each member of the organization for three reasons.

Elstone says they want input from each member about where the Chamber should be going and what it should be doing.

They will encourage members to become active in the organization and help it to survive by asking members for a "voluntary fee increase" for the rest of the year to make up for the county's cut funds.

And they will ask members who have not sent in their membership fees to pay up.

Elstone says she hopes member businesses will be able to kick in $25 or $50, but "business isn't great now, this summer isn't particularly rosy."

The directors are willing to listen to whatever their members say, Elstone says, even if it is negative towards the Chamber. "When we get out there we may find everyone says 'We don't care if the Chamber folds in six months.'

"We hope that's not the response we meet, but it's better to go out and find out than to keep something going no one cares about."

Teachers' request nixed

by BRIAN RODNICK

Staff Reporter

Teachers belong in school at exam time, the Haliburton County Board of Education decided Tuesday, rejecting a suggestion to allow high school teachers to mark exam papers at home during finals.

"The teachers have an obligation to be at the school," said Trustee Len Salvatori. "We would be subject to abuse if we accept this."

Several teachers suggested the idea to Trustee Tim Casey, who sits on the board's Secondary School Liaison Committee. They felt that while the school was being cleaned-up for summer classes, it would be too noisy to mark

People alienated by elected representatives, says NDP allow Canada the chance to develop a competitive edge.

"The Canada in two to five years from now could be a very different Canada than we know in this room," he said.

Individual Canadians must press for change, said Drainville, adding some have already. He noted that in public forums, people have said Canada should remain a peaceful nation and should never have been involved in the Gulf Crisis. "A more peaceful nation is at the core of the new Canada people want to see."

Communication with elected representatives is pivotal for the public to have views such as this known. "Your role over the next two years with referendums will be very important to politicians," he said. "If they don't hear from you, they'll go off and do what they want."

Vainio agreed, and blamed part of Canada's unity problems on citizens' alienation from their elected representatives — "present company exempted," she joked. Predictably, she placed the majority of the blame on the federal government and its apparent lack of strong leadership.

"The Tories haven't given us any direction from the centre. We're blaming the victims," she said. "If Canadians weren't such a civilized nation, you would think we were on the verge of some kind of coup."

She went on to dispel "Tory" myths about unity, the first being that Canadians are too divided to unite, with the rise of the Reform Party and Parti Quebecois as direct proof. "In some respect this shows it, but in others their rise shows democracy in action."

In another context, Vainio sees the rise of these political parties, which she labels as protest groups, as a sign Canada is lacking a strong central government.

"We're a cranky and confused group, unable to arrive at consensus due to geography and culture," she said, calling this the Tories second biggest myth.

On the economic side, Vainio believes the Conservatives have shown strong leadership over the last seven years, but with a price.

"They've caused the economic disintegration of our country," she said. "You know what they've been calling it, 'temporary pain for long term gain'."

To rectify the situation, Vainio described how a central NDP government would handle Canada's social and economic restructuring. This would include abolishing the appointed senate, reforming the tax system and renegotiating the free trade agreement. A recent newspaper article has suggested Canadians have lost 315,000 jobs due to free trade.

In regards to Quebec, Vainio insists the economic factor will keep the province from separating. "Why would Quebec opt out? The balance sheet is overwhelming for it to remain in confederation... I'm an eternal optimist, why break up a beautiful country?" she said, when asked by a member of the public how Quebec can be wooed back when the next federal election is two years away.

Those in attendance agreed with the speakers on many issues, including the lack of a strong central leadership. "This government took the pride out this country," said a man in the audience, using the VIA rail cuts as an example.

Vainio suggested Canada should invest in itself, through retraining programs and new business ventures.

"Canadians are an entrepreneurial group, but we have small population. However, it's not our smallness but the government policy angle that stops us. We need to get the right government in there to get things on the right track."

As for the future of Canada's unity: "I think the intensity has watered down and people are apathetic about it. It's time to work hard to get to the root of the problem, which are political and economic alienation. You can draw a straight line to Ottawa."

Driving course to be offered in the summer

by BRIAN RODNICK
Staff Reporter

To provide a service, the Haliburton County Board of Education has decided to operate its driver education course throughout the summer at Haliburton Highlands Secondary School.

Results of a recent student poll conducted by the board, suggested that offering a summer course would be beneficial, as well as a popular alternative to taking the course during the school year.

"It would relieve some of the pressure off the fall and winter driving terms," said Business Administrator Jim Bradley at Tuesday's meeting.

Ninety-four students took the course this year, which requires 25 hours of in-class instruction and ten hours of driving training.

Bradley estimates a minimum of ten students must register to justify the $3,000 cost of the six week course. The board picks up 25 per cent of the fee, leaving students to pay $225. Adults wishing to take advantage of the course are exempt from the discount and must pay $300.

The course would be run in the evenings to allow people who are working the opportunity to take part.

Volunteers make walk an outstanding success

by ED WHITE
Staff Reporter

A chain is only as strong as its weakest link, but in the Walk For Water a group of dedicated individuals bonded what could have been a loose social event into an unbreakable manifestation of community spirit directed to a noble endeavor.

Here are the stories of a few of them:

Norm Wallace and Mary Hicks: These two seniors were the honorary Grand Marshals of the walk for water, and between them raised over $1,300. Over the past eight years for Wallace, and five years for Hicks, the two have raised enough to pay for 20 wells.

How do they do it? "A whole lot of driving and time. This year I drove three or four hundred miles calling on people," says Wallace, who raised $1,071 from 90 people. "If I didn't drive it myself I don't think anyone could cover it. Most I get are cottage people I have worked for over 45 years. The kids don't know them and they couldn't get them. As long as I'm around I'll try to do it."

He and Hicks say they think H.A.V.E. is doing great things. "Think of all these people who don't have water. And it's usually the women who have to do the walking to get it. Ten or 15 kilometers to get a jug of filthy water," he says, shaking his head. "There's something wrong if we can't do something about it."

Hicks says she was able to raise a lot of her money by just getting word out that she was looking for support. "People were coming up to me an volunteering their money. I think it's wonderful."

Ish Lal and his son Prashant: Before taking part in the walk, the Lals had to take a drive — Ish comes from Lindsay, and Prashant came up from Toronto. The Lals are the biggest financial benefactors of the Walk For Water. Ish by himself raised $2,000, and his son added $475. The two are dedicated volunteers, and Prashant, who is involved in Easter Seals, the United Way, and is a foster parent says "we're trying to help people who really need it."

The elder Lal says he takes part in the Walk For Water because "we are fortunate enough to be in this part of the world. There's water here, everywhere," he says, scanning a stream trickling into Lake Kashagawigamog. "But there are parts of the world where a glass of water is just a dream." He has been in all eight Walks For Water.

Next January Ish is going to India to do a check-up on the wells H.A.V.E. has helped set up there.

Both were pleased with this year's walk. Ish said he likes seeing all the children on bikes this year. "More kids should bring their bikes. They're looking for excitement, and what excitement is there in walking?"

And Prashant enjoys something that isn't on this year's course — blackflies. "I sent in my registration form and said I liked the walk, but I didn't expect the blackflies. I'm from Toronto, we don't have bugs," he says, laughing.

David and Judy Phillips and their daughter Katie: "It's one group of people here helping one group of people there," says Judy Phillips about H.A.V.E. and another development organization, Habitat For Humanity, her family worked with in Nicaragua.

The Phillips worked in a small village in the Latin American nation, building houses. Mr. Phillips worked there in 1987 and 1988, and the family went over in 1989.

People there had to walk over a kilometer down a mountainside to get water, and there were no sewers or laundry facilities.

The Phillips came back to Minden, where they live, and told H.A.V.E. about the village's problem with water. The organization raised money, and helped establish a small pipeline.

Mr. Phillips says H.A.V.E.'s strength comes from its members, who alert the group to areas where help is needed. "If a Haliburton person is somewhere and sees that there's a need for water they can go back to the committee and tell them about it. Then the committee can work through a local partner there, maybe a well digger, and get the job done."

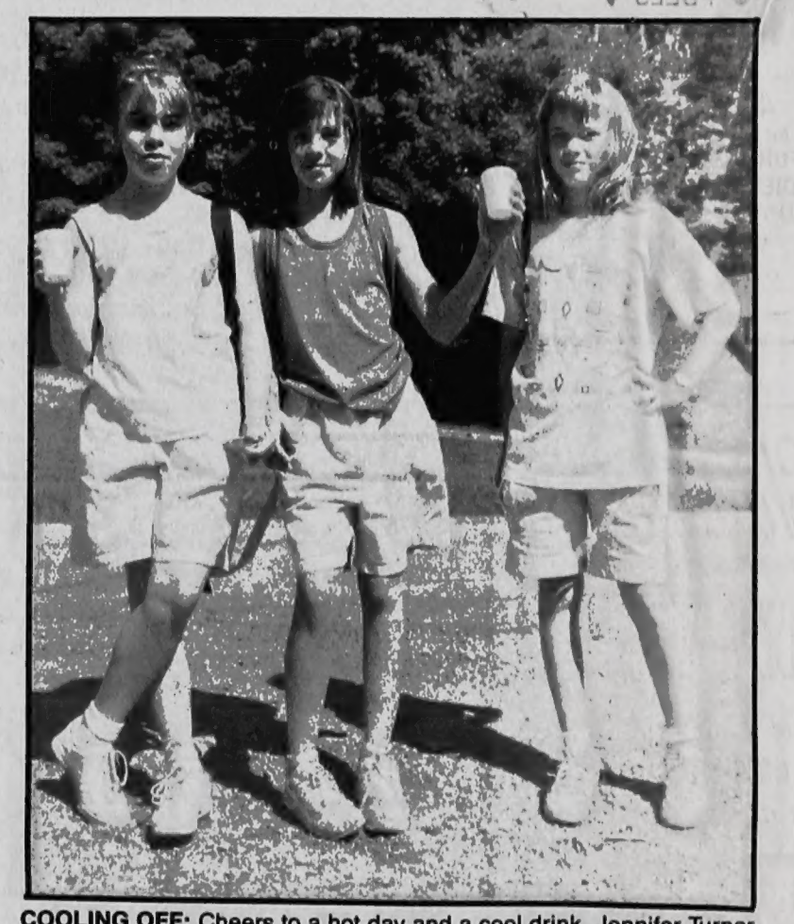
"Think of all these people who don't have water and it's usually the women who do the walking to get it. There's something wrong if we can't do something about it."

Stephanie Sales, Jennifer Turner and Amanda Duncombe: The three girls are about five kilometers into the walk, don't look tired at all, and are in front of most of the walkers.

"We just thought we'd do something good. We have water, and we take it for granted. But in the Gambia they don't have much," says Jennifer.

Amanda says she and Jennifer used to be taken on the walk by their parents, but now they do it because they think it is a good thing to do.

This year they brought a new recruit. "We're best friends," says Jennifer of Amanda, "and we thought we'd ask friends at school to come along. This is Stephanie's first time."



COOLING OFF: Cheers to a hot day and a cool drink. Jennifer Turner, Stephanie Sales and Amanda Duncombe take some refreshment at a check-point along the way.

Walk crosses the water

another section of the walk.

A boat took ambitious walkers across the lake for the second half of the route, and tired walkers back to Haliburton where hot dogs, soft drinks, and entertainers awaited them.

The first to complete the course was a running Aaron Tomlinson, at two hours and four minutes. Others held to a more leisurely gait, stretching the walk into the early afternoon.

At the band shell walkers recorded their times, handed in their sheets, and had lunch. Some sat in the shade while others put on suntan lotion and soaked up the sun.

People looked tired, but refreshed, relaxing and maybe thinking about next year's walk for water.

VETERAN WALKERS: This year's honorary Grand Marshals, Norm Wallace and May Hicks, give a thumbs up for the event they have supported for most of its life. Together they raised almost $1,400.

Vandals strike Vic. St. school

by BRIAN RODNICK
Staff Reporter

Vandals targeted the Victoria Street Public School in Haliburton over the Victoria Day weekend, leaving a window open and obscenities scribbled on the side of one of the portables.

A custodian discovered the open window at the back of the school on Sunday, May 19. Nothing was out of place.

Returning the next day, the custodian discovered the same window open, with papers from inside the classroom blown around the schoolyard and graffiti on the portable.

Brush and matches were also found strewn up against the back of the school. "I found this part to be more of a concern," said Principal Mike Burke. The vandals had transported dry grass clippings from the flood plain behind the school.

"I'm sure its just some kids playing around," said OPP Const. Ron Buchanan. In an attempt to prevent the vandals from returning, Buchanan will increase his surveillance of the school.

HAVE gets glowing review from international aid rep.

by ED WHITE
Staff Reporter

H.A.V.E. is "one of the most effective volunteer development organizations I have to deal with," says the senior program coordinator for the Ontario International Development Program (OIDP).

Franz Wong, whose organization assists non-governmental development organizations across the country, says H.A.V.E. has shown it can handle complicated operations. "It has the ability to effectively manage a project. They don't use their volunteer status as an excuse. They don't back away from projects by saying 'We can't do it because we're only volunteers.'"

He says some development organizations have failed because of poor management and financial incompetence, but H.A.V.E. shows none of these problems.

He also praised the group's ability to use its members experiences and abilities. "H.A.V.E. should be commended for its grass roots approach.

The OIDP acts as a liaison between CIDA (Canadian International Development Agency) and non-governmental organizations (NGOs), and between the various NGOs themselves.

He says the OIDP wants to set up a system of peer review, where organizations like H.A.V.E. will review the operations of other groups, and other groups will look over what H.A.V.E. is doing.

"Development is a really dynamic process," he says. "NGOs have to be dynamic. Even organizations like H.A.V.E., which are very good, are helped by reviewing what they do."

When H.A.V.E. raises money for a project, they work out the matching grants from CIDA through the OIDP. This year CIDA has set aside $45,000 to match H.A.V.E. funds at rate of three-to-one.

This means if H.A.V.E. can raise $15,000, CIDA will bring the total to $60,000.

Wong says H.A.V.E. is doing a type of development work that is essential for developing nations. "It's not only drinking water that is important. They need water to combat disease, for health, sanitation and the environment."

Fine paper recycled here

by BRIAN RODNICK
Staff Reporter

Final details are being worked out for a fine paper recycling program in Haliburton County, as interested residents and businesses sign up.

"Everybody has seemed to get into it," says Louise Craig, energy manager representative for Ontario Hydro in Minden.

In January she instituted a program with some students at Archie Stouffer Elementary School to recycle the computer paper at both Hydro and the school.

An article in a local paper brought attention to the program and "It kind of snowballed from there," says Craig.

With the assistance of Haliburton's Waste Management Coordinator Len Munt, Craig is now reviewing quotes from recycling companies. Craig has been using a Muskoka recycler, but feels the contract should go to someone locally.

Customers will be charged a minimal fee for the service, which will require the paper to be dropped-off in a locked dumpster outside the Ministry of Natural Resource building in Minden. Keys for the bin will be given out to designated customers and business contributors. Both Munt and Craig would have master keys.

"I know it's not the most ideal situation, but it will have to be like this for at least the first six months," says Craig.

In his proposal to the Haliburton County Board of Education at Tuesday's meeting, Munt estimated it would cost the board roughly $30 a month to subscribe. This fee would lower as more customers signed up.

"We already have a number of major contributors," says Munt, including Ontario Hydro, MNR, and the OPP. Several resorts have also expressed interest.

The board agreed to support the program once it could make arrangements to have the paper transported to the bin.

Officer fights local crime after a year on the beat

by ED WHITE
Staff Reporter

Community policing works.

That is what Constable Ron Buchanan says he has learned from his first year stationed in Haliburton.

"If you walk downtown it's obvious," he says, "The amount of damage is way down from other years. That's just from having someone here in town. It's a shame I can't be here all the time."

Dysart Reeve Bill Davis says having Buchanan in the village puts a dent into crime. "His presence in the community is a deterrent. Even if he was here 24 hours a day there would still be some problems. But he has a good rapport with the young people, and if something happens in town someone is sure to tell him about it."

One of the advantages of having a police officer stationed in the same location over a long period of time is that the hard-core of criminals becomes known to the officer, and he can more quickly and successfully investigate crimes.

Buchanan says "in some crimes I know who did it, but I'm unable to prove it. I keep them in my mind till I get the concrete evidence I need." He says there is much less of this when a number of police patrol an area, but do not know the people as well.

"The people I know would much rather talk to a police officer they know. If you know me, you'd rather talk to me than someone you don't know," says Buchanan.

He says many of his tips come from casual conversations with people who drop by the office for a chat. "Often we'll just talk in general about a crime and they'll come out with an idea. Then I'll follow it up."

From getting to know merchants in town Buchanan has discovered a major form of crime that had been unnoticed by the police. "About $100,000 a year is shoplifted in Haliburton, but no-one ever told the police. It's been around a long time, but I'm surprised the people haven't notified the police just how bad it is."

He says he found out about the problem by talking to merchants who would tell him about one incident, and then about how much was happening altogether.

To fight the problem Buchanan says he is putting together a package of videos and information for the business community about how to detect and control shoplifting.

Although Buchanan has been in Haliburton a year, he still does not have a committee of local people to discuss policing priorities with. He says he was too busy over the winter to set one up, but hopes to have one soon.

"I used to think it wasn't necessary, but I've changed my mind now. I've been taking on a lot of things that a committee could do for me," Buchanan says. "For example, a committee could look into shoplifting and arrange meetings with the business community and resolve the issue."

Buchanan says he has not been able to walk a beat very often because of the amount of paperwork he has. "The original conception of walking main street for 10 hours a shift is not going to happen. You can't walk and work at the same time. I'm lucky if I can get out there for one hour on a 10 hour shift."

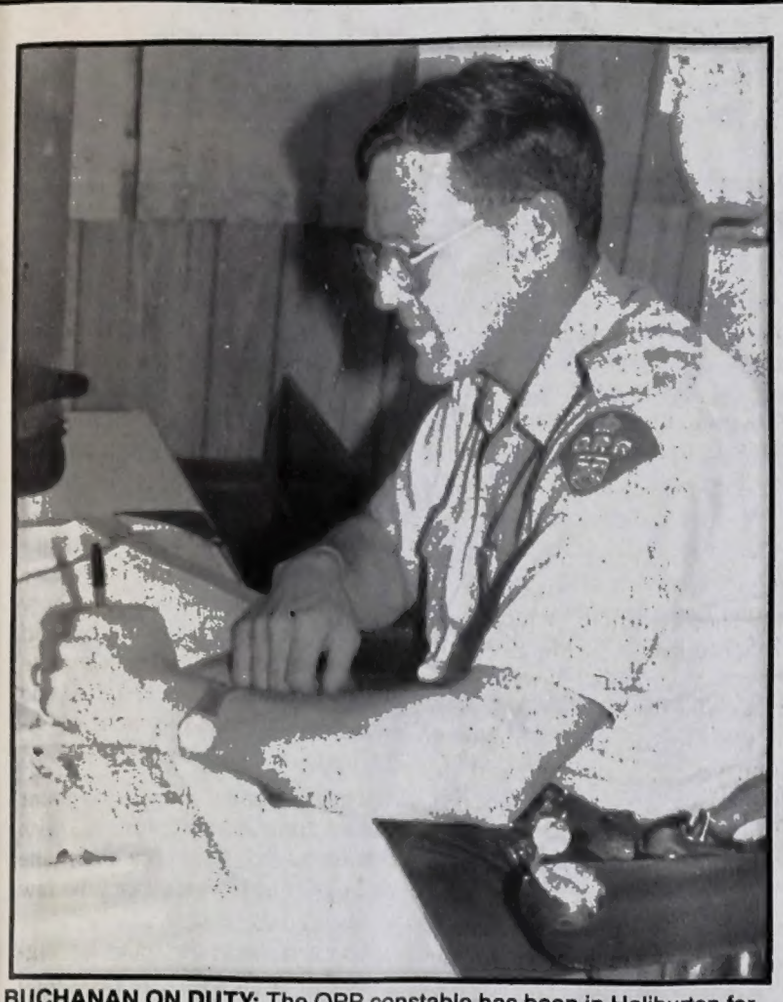
But he says even if people don't actually see him on the street, they still know he is there. "It's reassuring for people just to know there's a police officer in town. As people have noticed — when I'm here there are other police in town to. A lot drop by on their shifts."

Buchanan thinks community policing has a good future. "It's the only way policing is going to get back on track. The system is asking more and more and to offer people the policing they deserve everything has to go back to being community-oriented, where they know they have a community that will help clean up situations and stop occurrences that take up so much time."

It is a good way to rekindle community spirit, he says. "They feel they're doing something important for their community. They'll suddenly take a pride in what they're doing and solve a lot of the problems themselves."

An example of this is the man who, at the arena, went up to a truck that was racing around, yanked the door open, and told the driver to quit roaring around. Buchanan says this is a lot more effective than calling the police and having to wait for a car to arrive, by which time the truck would have been long-gone.

Staff Sergeant Bill Elliott of the Minden OPP says he thinks this has been an excellent year for Haliburton. "If all you can do is drive through town with the window down with the air conditioner going you're not going to hear much. Having Ron Buchanan on the street has certainly helped."



BUCHANAN ON DUTY: The OPP constable has been in Haliburton for a year, in which time he says he has learned now to fight crime effectively. Local people dropping by his office, give him tips and information concerning crimes.

Minden complex awaits okay

The Staanworth Non-Profit Housing Corporation will only have to wait a few more weeks to see if the provincial government will approve their plan to build a 36-unit, $4-million complex for the frail and elderly on Parkside Crescent in Minden.

President Ed Pergolas is confident the government will allow the Staanworth NPHC to go ahead with the project which is to begin operating in 1992.

"All we have is approval in principle right now, but we've had 100 percent approval in our four other housing projects," says Pergolas.

The need for a complex with dining facilities and a place where doctors and nurses could be on hand was identified in the latest health study conducted by the Haliburton County Health Council.

Normally seniors apartments are funded by the Ministry of Housing, but because this project integrates social services it involves the Ministry of Health and the Ministry of Community and Social Services at the provincial level. The federal government is also involved in supplying the building funds through the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Schools now can compute

Staff at three county elementary schools will soon have help in keeping administrative details, thanks to some new micro computers.

In its 1991 budget, the Haliburton Board of Education set aside $15,000 to buy three computers, including software, for the Archie Stouffer Elementary in Minden, and Haliburton's J. Douglas Hodgson Elementary and the Victoria Street School.

"Their capability is limited only by the imagination of the staff using them," said Business Administrator Jim Bradley, at Tuesday's meeting.

"You can do whatever you want with them," he said, adding students' phone numbers and addresses could be stored, allowing them to be easily retrieved.

papers, and suggested teachers not supervising exams be allowed to work at home.

"Maybe you feel our teaching staff aren't capable enough to follow guidelines?" said Casey, suggesting the board try the idea once to see how it went. The board could not be persuaded.

"On the first hearing it does sort of make sense, but the other aspects of it are more important," said Trustee John Munro, who agreed with the board that teachers should be at school in case students needed help with their studies.

"It's not a matter of us not trusting our teachers, it's more a matter of public perception," he said. "We're a small community and this could do us damage."

Although some school systems use such an arrangement, the board felt local ratepayers would not accept this idea in Haliburton.

NEW! Sting-x-tractor™
INSECT VENOM EXTRACTOR

"Don't Go North Without It!"
Instant Sting Relief from:
Bee • Wasp • Hornet • Flea • Mosquito • Spider • Scorpion
The Insect Venom Extractor is a one-hand operated vacuum pump that painlessly eliminates the poison from insect bites or stings. This suction action removes the cause of pain and provides instant relief. Extracting the venom (before it spreads through the body) reduces and, in most cases, eliminates the hazard and itching of untreated insect stings.
Clinically Proven Results
94% of the subjects in controlled clinical tests had no reaction or only a minor one from the sting of a wasp when they used the Sting-x-tractor as directed. Extraction of the venom is far superior to old methods of treating stings with swabs or ointments. Sting-x-tractor may be helpful in evacuating puncture wounds from needles or other sharp objects purging the injury and avoiding infection or contamination.
Sting-x-tractor Benefits:
• Instant sting relief • Easy to use, reusable • Base can be turned for fingers • Painless • 775 mb of vacuum • Handle end removes stingers • Evacuates puncture wound • Fits first aid kits • Clinically tested.

Environment's allies need focus: naturalist

by SUSAN CAMPBELL
Staff Reporter

There are more people interested in saving the environment than destroying it these days, but they are just not organized, naturalist R.D. Lawrence told a group of conservation groups gathered at Haliburton Forest on Saturday.

Lawrence said he is fed up with leading conservation groups who continuously seek out money but produce no results, often times because they want to avoid confrontation with the government.

Representatives of the groups at the meeting were asked to endorse and/or make recommendations concerning an article Lawrence wrote which he wants to rearrange and submit to the Premier of Ontario. In the form of a brief, it will serve as the mandate of a loosely formed coalition of conservation groups in the province who "seek order where there is presently chaos"

Seven of the eight groups present agreed with the principles of Lawrence's article which was published in the Spring 1991 edition of "Animals' Voice", the magazine of the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. One person said he would have to discuss the proposals made in the article with his organization before he could endorse it.

In the article, Lawrence states: "as matters were handled in the past in Ontario by the previous administrations, the policies of the Ministry of the Environment and the Ministry of Natural Resources have allowed the environment, its wildlife, and its habitat to be grossly abused...".

The article discusses how hunting endangers wildlife and poses serious risks to humans, and how poaching is prevalent and beyond the enforcement is inadequate because police are understaffed and communication equipment is inadequate.

Spring bear hunting, bear baiting, bow hunting, hunting with hounds and lead shot are inhumane and must be eliminated and the law enforced, the article states.

One person at the meeting suggested that the brief be presented to the government and then arrangements be made with the Ministries to discuss its contents. Lawrence said it was more important to reach politicians than bureaucrats in the Ministries who now run the show. "The bureacracy is entrenched," he says, "so we've got to reach the political government if we want change."

The issue of native rights to land and consequent disputes over hunting rights was also discussed at the meeting. It was mentioned that natives were could make a claim to the land it they hunted on it.

Lawrence said hunting was a conservation issue, not a native issue and that native rights was a matter of federal jurisdiction which would likely have to go to the Supreme Court of Canada. Although it was agreed that the issue was important, the group agreed to deal with the issue when it came at them, rather than disclosing a statement on the matter beforehand.

Lawrence is not only asking that conservation groups support the brief, he is also calling on them to circulate a petition to the public demanding that the government act immediately to save the environment.

"We have to start somewhere," he told the people at the meeting. "We have to get a foot in the door with the proper conservation measures, to show there are a lot of concerns, and to frighten politicians with votes."

Gooderham school gets new principal

by BRIAN RODNICK
Staff Reporter

While most teachers are looking forward to summer vacation, Ruth Lewis can hardly wait for first day of school. September is when the Haliburton grade school teacher takes over duties as principal of Gooderham Elementary School.

"It's going to be different than working with grade sevens and eights. But I'm looking forward to getting in there," she says of her new appointment.

Lewis has taught Grade 7 and 8 at J. Douglas Hodgson Elementary since 1987. Before that she taught emotionally disturbed students at the Browndale and Pine River facilities.

Her teaching career began in Willowdale 26 years ago. Since then, Lewis has taught at a number of schools in Stouffville and Middlesex County.

Besides teaching, Lewis has been heavily involved in several committees, and has been the President of the Women Teachers' Association. She is also actively involved in the Haliburton Highlands Little Theatre and sings in the choir at St. George's Anglican Church, where she is a qualified lay reader.

And what does her husband and three children think of her new position? They couldn't be happier.

"They think it's great," she says, joking that her teenagers will now have to take the bus to school instead of hitching a ride with her.

Lewis replaces Audrey Chambers, who has requested a transfer to JDHES.

Home Support redfines its terms to clarify voting memberships

by BRIAN RODNICK
Staff Reporter

In an attempt to increase its voting membership, Haliburton County Home Support Services replaced its constitution with two general by-laws which re-organize its board of directors and define which members have the right to vote.

"By adopting these by-laws you have an opportunity for an expanded voting base," said John Nichols, the HCHSS's lawyer at its annual general meeting on Friday.

Members are now classified as voting and non-voting. A voting member can be a county resident (including Kinmount and Dorset), who pays their $10 dollar membership fee and can complete 15 hours of volunteer service by December 31, 1991; at which time the volunteer hours double to qualify as a member for 1992.

A non-voting member can be a resident who applies for non-voting member status and pays the $10 dollar fee.

"The challenge is to appear to be an open organization," said Nichols, adding non-profit organizations operate different legally than most organizations.

"A non-profit organization isn't a democracy where every Tom, Dick and Harry has the right to join in."

By not clearly defining who can vote, Nichols said HCHSS could run the risk of what he called "a single issue crusader", who packs the annual meeting with supporters to vote an issue across. "All the objects of the organization must be maintained," he said.

Last year's general meeting turned volatile, when the HCHSS decided its constitution was unclear and allowed only the 10 founding board members and the directorate to vote. Approximately 20 of its members walked out in anger.

"We went with legalities," said Executive Director Donna Pacey in explaining the uproar. She is confident the new by-laws will prevent a similar occurrence from happening in the future, adding any one wishing to become a voting member can easily do so by the end of the year. "Fifteen hours of volunteer service is peanuts," she said.

Results of an agency review conducted in the fall, also suggested to HCHSS that a more open membership was needed; "to ensure we have enough volunteers for the organization," said Marlene Mestroni, who sat on HCHSS's review committee.

The by-laws also re-organizes the board of directors, which now will consist of 11 members, not seven. The new board includes: the past president (ex-officio), president, a first and second vice-president (the second VP acts as treasurer), secretary, and six directors who are not executive members.

Elections for the board were postponed until September 13, to allow anyone who wants to vote the opportunity to obtain voting member status under the new by-laws.

Office wins award

Stanhope has received an award from Ontario Hydro for installing a revolutionary heating system in its new municipal office.

On Friday the municipality received a $4,500 cheque from Ontario Hydro.

Using a ground source pump, 1000 feet of piping transfers heat from the earth into the office where it's disbursed by electric fans. This will reduce the overall winter electricity demand by 15 kilowatts.

Being fair

Market value assessment has been a thorny issue wherever it has been considered, but in cottage country, it is particularly troublesome. In recent years cottage associations have been arguing forcefully that the concept of funding provincially controlled but locally delivered services such as education through property taxes, is unfair. Cottagers can't use the local education system, yet a significant portion of property taxes are levied by the board of education. It would be fairer, says the Federation of Ontario Cottager Associations, to pay for education through general tax revenues. That way, people would fund education in proportion to their income. Under the present system, a person who owns a $250,000 cottage as well as a house in another community pays more to support the provincial education system than does someone who owns a house of equivalent value but buys a boat rather than a cottage.

Despite FOCA's lobbying campaign, there is no indication at present that education taxes will be removed from local property taxes, although it seems probable that a some point, the argument for reform will win out. In the meantime, cottagers are turning their attention to another taxation issue — assessment reform. Several municipalities in Haliburton County have held forums recently to tell area property owners about the implications of moving to an assessment formula that more closely reflects present market values for lakeshore and other kinds of property. Predictably, the reaction from many property owners to the change has been negative. In Glamorgan Township, for example, representatives of lake associations feared their taxes would rise substantially as a result of council's decision to use 1988 market values, scrapping the old system of 1980 values adjusted by a complex mathematical formula intended to account for differences in the rising values of various kinds of property. Council claimed the average increase would be $35, but the number had little credibility with cottagers who have seen their taxes rise by hundreds of dollars in the past few years.

There is no doubt that market value assessment shifts the burden of taxes away from rural properties and businesses and onto lakeshore property, which has appreciated substantially in recent years. A cottage that was built 30 or 40 years ago for a few thousand dollars and a summer of labour, today may be worth hundreds of thousands of dollars. But that doesn't mean that the people who own it are wealthy. If they would rather use their cottage than sell it and realize the capital gain, the 'wealth' their lakeshore property represents is nothing more than a number on paper — and a volatile one at that, given present market conditions. Is if fair to treat cottages as wealth and tax them more heavily than other forms of property? Will the system force people of modest means who built cottages before the property boom, or who inherited a cottage from parents, to sell them rather than face property tax costs they cannot absorb? The concern is legitimate.

On the other side of the issue is the question of fairness. Leaving aside individual cases of hardship, it is difficult not to argue that changes brought about by assessing properties according to 1988 values are fairer than retaining the old formulas. If value is the base on which taxes are to be levied, then values must reflect current market conditions. If the change shifts a greater burden onto older cottage properties, and lightens the tax load on rural lands, residential homes and businesses, then clearly they have been treated unfairly in the past. Lakefront property owners have been getting a tax break at the expense of other local property owners. And the unfairness has existed among lakeshore property owners as well, since new cottages have generally had higher assessment than older cottages, even with the mathematical formulas that have been applied to try to level the imbalances.

Market value assessment may not make many people happy, but it is the best way to bring fairness into the tax equation.

Visitor's criticism unfounded

MORE LETTERS
FROM ECHO READERS...

To the Editor:

I wish to respond to the comments made in the May 28 issue of the Haliburton County Echo by a recent week-end visitor from Kitchener in respect to the organizing of the Highland Games. I would be remiss if I did not acknowledge the time and effort expended by the members of the committee organizing this outstanding event. Haliburton is fortunate in having quality volunteers with a variety of skills who give so generously of their time.

The woman from Kitchener refers to Haliburton has having "the highest ratio of alcoholics in the Province of Ontario, standing second in Canada only behind the N.W.T.". It would be interesting to know the source of her statistics.

It is irresponsible for a casual visitor without a knowledge of the community and its many worthwhile endeavors to use our local paper to initiate a 'put-down' of our many dedicated volunteers.

Trailer sites seen as harmful

To the Editor:

Re: May 21st article "Trailer Sites said to save the shoreline."

When does no mean no? After 12 months Dan Buhl is back trying to convince Dysart council to allow him to indulge himself by leasing campsites on Pelaw Lake.

As a property owner on Upper Pelaw I would like to describe what has happened to this tiny lake since the Haliburton Forest and Wildlife Reserve put 11 campsites down the north-west shore.

Since they went in I have not seen a single dear on my property.

I have not seen another moose swim across the lake, the beavers are gone, we no longer have loons.

At the top end of this lake is a beautiful set of rapids.

This is no secret and the Saturday an Sunday afternoon traffic of motor boats from Lower Pelaw, Little Redstone and Big Redstone make canoe paddling in the river downright hazardous. Most of these boats spend a maximum of 10 minutes roaring up to the rapids and then out again — the wave action on our fragile shore is horrendous.

But back to the existing campsites. Without hydro some of the wilderness camper types find it necessary to run a generator most of the day — so much for hearing the birds. Most of them have boats with motors and all of them have visitors and overnight guests who arrive with boats and motors. Often these boaters try waterskiing — noisy and very dangerous on such a small lake. One entire weekend last summer one of the visitors brought his own personal jet boat or water Ski doo! The noise from this thing was even worse than the generators.

Who can control any of this? There is a boat launch all paved and ready at the bridge on Redken drive.

Now about shoreline damage: I own over 800 feet and have changed less shoreline than anyone campsite. I invite any councillor or interested person to come and bear witness to this!

I love this piece of Haliburton and if I had my way, would try and bring back all that is lost, that made it so special — the animals & birds. But alas man is still not satisfied and wants to keep on crowding and pushing and shoving. These are the reasons I leave Yonge Street in Toronto.

When will no really mean no! By the way, one of these wonderful wilderness campsites even has a "dish" to try and improve their T.V. reception.

Now I ask you . . . .

Karla Thomson,
Toronto.

FEIR PLAY

CREIGHTON FEIR

THE H.A.V.E. WALK For Water held on Saturday was once again a resounding success. Latest reports just in tell us that 85 participants were out on the walk and over $10,000. has been raised in pledges. This month has been designated "Fresh Water Month" by the supporters and members of H.A.V.E. (Help A Village Effort) of the Haliburton Highlands. This local group of citizens has in the past seven years drilled over one hundred water wells in India and West Africa and has supplied fresh, safe water to thousands of remote villagers in the poorest of the poor areas of the Third World. Financing for this work comes from fund raising events such as Saturday's Walk For Water around Lake Kashagawigamog from the Head Lake Band Shell, from the Dime A Day Bank programme now in operation year round, from a spring and fall concert held each year and from general donations from the public. This month the H.A.V.E. Committee is a participant in the Mission offerings of the Haliburton United Church congregation.

The Kennisis Lake Cottagers Association in their recent newsletter inform us that they have scheduled three sailing Regattas for this summer. The "Laser Only" Regatta was a terrific success last summer. The "Miscellaneous Class" Regatta was run at Little Kennisis Lake last year and will be scheduled there again this summer. This year the group are hoping to attract more sailors from Little Kennisis. The August 1st weekend always attracts a great number of boats in three classes: Laser, Miscellaneous and Windsurfer. All races will be run in the area in front of the Marinas, except for those run on Little Kennisis Lake.

I took in the Home and Vacation Show at Haliburton on Friday evening. The displays featured by the many exhibitors looked very attractive. All the booths were sold prior to the show dates and the event was sponsored by the Haliburton Curling Club. Some of the exhibitors told me that in their opinion the crowds were definitely down this year. It could be the recession or a sign of the times. The three Fashion Shows held during the weekend in conjunction with the Home and Vacation Show proved once again to be a big hit with the audience.

A horse named Dysart Boschiella, owned by Gary Vasey and Don Finn, came in third in the seventh race at Woodbine on Saturday.

The was plenty of activity last Wednesday evening when the Haliburton Minor Softball League swung into action on three fronts. Enthusiasm is running so high three different playing fields are needed to accommodate the 200 to 300 young boys and girls who are turning out to play softball and T-Ball. Two or three diamonds are in operation at the J. Douglas Hodgson Senior Elementary School, one at the Haliburton Highlands Secondary School and one at the fairgrounds. It was quite evident last Wednesday evening that coaches, managers and helpers are urgently needed to look after the large number of players. Last week some of the spectators had to jump in to help with some of the teams.

Irene Bailey of Haliburton is retiring from MDS. She has been employed in this position for the past eight years. Friends and relatives gathered at Deer Lodge on Thursday May 30 to honour Irene with a retirement party. We join with her many friends in wishing her many years of good health and happiness.

The other day I just happened to be going through my files when I came across a copy of one of the first editions of the Haliburton County Echo which was printed in Haliburton on Thursday, January 10, 1952. Being a former Rotarian I was quite interested in reading on page six of that issue a report on one of the Haliburton Rotary Club meetings held at that time. The article went on to say that the Haliburton Rotary Club held their usual weekly meeting at the Legion Hall on Thursday evening. The programme was in the hands of Mervyn Robertson who planned an entertaining evening in the same lines as the popular radio programme "Your Beef". Beefs from various members varied from road and traffic complaints to devaluation in currency and the ever increasing cost of living. C.W. Hodgson, M.P. was present and gave a vigorous but short speech on Canada.

ONE OF THE STRONGEST memories from my childhood is of walking south along Wellington Street on my way back from a trip to downtown London late in the afternoon, and passing within a block of the Canada Bread bakery.

The smell of fresh-baked bread made the temptation to spoil one's supper overwhelming. We often got heck when we got home, but my buddy Glen and I would usually slip in and buy an unwrapped loaf for a dime.

It was always white bread, and so fresh from the oven that we would watch the sweaty bakers in their white uniforms tip them right out of the loaf pans onto the conveyor. One of us would tear the loaf in half, and the other would then have first choice on which half he wanted.

The insides were hot enough to burn your fingers, and could easily be mashed down to a ball that would fit in the palm of your hand. (Lord knows what it did to our tummies). But it was the crisp, fresh crust that I can still taste in my mind.

All these sensations came flooding back when I came across a story from Los Angeles. There, the South Coast Air Quality Management District has recently decreed that all commerical bakeries across four counties, must install SMOG controls to capture the aroma of freshly baked bread before it spreads!

These strange people consider that heavenly smell air pollution! Having taken my nose through that area within the last year, I find this a bit like having a policeman manning the radar trap while someone is stealing a car down the road — something else that happens in that part of the world — as well as in ours...

Curiously, while these bureaucrats are banning this glorious aroma as air pollution, others are concerned that it — and others odors — will be used as subliminal marketing weapons.

Research in supermarkets has found that, when the in-store bakery is wafting appetite-inducing odors from their ovens, sales of bake goods skyrocket. Dr. Alan Hirsch compares this to other forms of subliminal advertising that can influence the subconscious, like those once tested on movie screens.

Dr. Hirsh, a graduate of the University of Michigan medical school, is a smell and taste researcher for an outfit in Chicago, and he says your brain waves can be altered by odors our noses can't consciously detect.

"One thing we found is, we can actually show one can have brain wave changes based on odor,' he said. "Some odors create changes in frontal alpha waves, making you feel more relaxed, while others affect beta waves, making you more excited.' Lavender, for instance, creates alpha waves, while jasmine has more of an exciting effect.

Hirsh is concerned that unscrupulous marketers could create a hidden odor that would create an atmosphere of trust, that a car dealer could spread in his showroom to make your more relaxed and trusting, easier to sell. (They already use 'new car' odor in spray bombs to make demonstrators easier to sell).

On the other hand, in the hands of the good guys, the same subliminal odor technology could be used to help people quit smoking and drinking, or be used to speed the learning process by helping people associate a specific smell with a certain fact.

"One thing we can show is that you can use odor to make people more effective and alert, keep them more awake,' he says. One study showed that commercial air fresheners enhanced people's ability to perform clerical duties, set goals, and work out procedures for completing tasks.

A test by the American Association for the Advancment of Science showed periodic bursts of peppermint fragrance did significantly better on a 40-minute computer test than people breathing plain air.

And while Western scientists are testing things like this, the Japanese are said to be five years ahead on developing artificial subliminal odors. In fact, one company there is on the market with an alarm clock that releases a floral scent 10 minutes before the alarm sounds, so the sleeper can awake refreshed.

Just as long as they don't start find ways to load them with the smells of fresh bread being baked. I'd wake up with a ravishing appetite and eat myself into an early grave in no time!

PIC OF THE PAST

Many local citizens of Haliburton County will recognize the two gentlemen in this photo which was taken several years ago. The Cruickshanks brothers are shown in front of their home which still stands on County Rd. 1 just past the Haliburton Hospital. Clayton, who is now a resident at Extendicare/Haliburton, is shown on the left and his brother Gordon, who is deceased, is on the left. The dog's name is Pal. The Cruickshanks brothers operated a farm on this property for many years and their livestock and vegetables were always big winners when Haliburton has a Fall Fair. Thanks to Lloyd (Buck) Baker for submitting this photo.

Weeds, seeds and gumbo soup

NORTHERN LIGHTS

VIRGINIA MUENZEL

EVERYTHING SEEMS greener this year. The grass is more lush. The trees and bushes are leafier and fuller. Maybe the leaf-eating caterpillars are on the wane at last. Or perhaps the rainy April we endured is paying off. Lately we seem to be having lovely, sunny days interspersed with showers just when we need them. Showers that give me a break from my planting frenzy and send me inside to finally houseclean a corner here and there.

If there ever really was a Johnny Appleseed his name must hang somewhere within my family tree because I am the seed planting-est person I know of. And that's not just my opinion. My gardening buddy down the road gave me a mug last Christmas that states, 'Gardening forever housework whenever.'

Strangers tell me things like, "You must have a very large family." or ask me, "Are you opening a vegetable stand?"

I just can't help myself. I love planting seeds. I love the challenge of beating out the bugs without resorting to chemical warfare. And I especially enjoy growing food in defiance of the climate.

After years of failures we finally figured out that in order to get any eggplant, they must be grown in large black pots in full sun on our front porch. Peppers, whose blossoms succumb to both excessive heat and cold, are now grown in pots on our back porch, where there is partial shade.

This year I'm making a final, valiant effort to grow lima beans. I love limas, but they are so persnickety. One year I got enough for one meal for myself. (Which was okay with Ed, 'cause he doesn't like them) But this year I've planted them in concrete building blocks in order to keep the soil warm enough for them. (Which shows you just how ridiculous I can get) Now all I have to do is erect a frost barrier for them.

Agricultural experiments are so interesting. A few weeks ago we planted three rows of various potatoes in shredded leaves. All the rest of the crop was planted the usual way. Now they're all growing and last evening, as I was hilling up the regular crop, I spent a great deal of time picking off potato bugs and squishing eggs. On the other hand there were no potato bugs, only flea beetles on the crop in leaves. Now I'm going to spray those flea beetles with juice from pulverized mullein leaves. We accidentally discovered that white flies and aphids dislike mullein. We'll see if it works for the flea beetles.

Just for the fun of it I ordered some okra seeds this year. I don't even know if I like okra, and, yes it is a southern vegetable. But if it's in the Dominion Seed Catalog it must be possible. If nothing else it will grow a very tall, pretty flower like sunflowers and Jerusalem Artichokes. They are supposed to be a very prolific vegetable so if luck is with us, we may be eating a great deal of gumbo soup.

In another month I'll be able to go out to my garden and pick a salad or a stir-fry. As long as we manage to outwit the raccoons, we'll be able to pick our own corn roast. Our tomatoes and cucumbers don't taste of wax. Before we go tubing we can pick handfuls of peas and beans to snack on while we float along. We seldom buy a carrot, onion or potato. We will certainly buy no garlic if even half of what we've planted grows. I can't get those kinds of rewards cleaning house.

One thing about having a surplus, we can swap our bountiful rhubarb for someone else's plentiful asparagus. That's the one vegetable we gave up on. Out of three small patches in three different soil conditions, we don't get enough spears to feed a small child with a poor appetite. Perhaps some grateful family on the other side of the earth enjoys it. Luckily, our friend's crop is healthy so we don't have to worry.

So it seems that as long as I'm able to dig a row, and get down on my knees to pull weeds, I'll keep on planting too many seeds. Someday they'll finally plant me. Hopefully under a superior patch of sugar snap peas.

Living on the cutting edge

DOWN OUR ROAD

SHARON LYNCH

THE NOISE REVERBERATED from the garage, through the family room and upstairs to the rest of the house. Banging the garage door with that amount of force spoke volumes. Boxes were flung from the back of his station wagon, one hitting the side of the porch, another sailing partway down the driveway. Loading the chainsaw, oil and gasoline into the vehicle he slammed the tailgate shut. It was probably heard clear across to the other side of the lake. Even the dog wouldn't venture out the door but sat looking through the glass, one paw lifted as though waiting for the all clear signal. Tony was mad.

It was the kind of mad that had to be let out in eruptions of physical energy. Shouting would not have done it. Banging, slamming, flinging; even kicking, had there been something within reach such as one of the kid's beach balls: these were how he vented his anger. Like a volcano he always spewed it out and then went on to other things, free of the seething burden.

But today it was not as easy to low up and rid himself of what had been building for the past few days. Life had suddenly become very complicated with decisions waiting to be made, and actions taken immediately if not sooner. Tony had more on his mind than he wanted to deal with but it wasn't a matter of choice. And on top of everything else, he still had logs to cut, cart, split and pile for next winter.

So he tried to put everything else out of his mind except cutting the logs and getting at least that one job done, finished, out of the way. The bull work of moving the wood around would eventually, he knew, eat up the energy of his anger. The whine of the saw mirrored his own agitated state.

After two loads had been cut, delivered and unloaded back at the house, he could feel himself slowing down. His mind was still grappling with the other concerns that had been plaguing him for days, but much of the anger and frustration was gone. Joe, who had already done his own wood, stopped to give Tony a hand. Together the work went faster.

It was hot. Tony didn't dare take off his shirt because of the bugs, but the sweat ran down into his eyes, stinging and blurring his vision. The insects hummed around his head and arms and he tried to ignore them. He was almost done anyway. Joe was throwing the wood into the trailer as fast as Tony could cut it. He was down to the second last log.

The chainsaw came down to the log, and moved forward farther than it needed to, hitting the second log and bouncing up and back, lightening quick and without warning. Tony, used to chainsaws all his life, felt the bounce. His free hand pushed down to steady the machine and for a second he thought he had. But then, within a heartbeat, the chainsaw slowed only enough to turn sideways, not enough to stay down. It continued to rear upward, with less momentum, but upward nevertheless.

Tony turned his head to watch as everything took on the unreal quality of a movie switched to slow motion. The saw arced then came back down, crossing over Tony's upper arm in a sideways angle. It bounced once, dipped into his arm again, then fell to the ground. Tony saw his arm open like a sliced tomato.

Instinctively he grabbed it as though to push it back together. But he couldn't stem the flow and the blood spurted between his fingers with a frightening ferocity. He called for Joe but there was no need. Joe already had his own shirt ripped off and was pushing it at Tony to wrap around the wound. The shirt wasn't enough however as red quickly seeped along the edges. Joe ran to his truck and back with a beach towel he had lying cross the seat. He told Tony to wrap it around his arm tight and hold it that way. Then the two of them jumped in the station wagon and headed for town.

Tony didn't know the old wagon could go that fast. Joe put his foot to the floor and never took it off. Twice they came upon slower vehicles. Joe made short work of them. He sat on his horn, flashed the high beams and kept coming. The cars pulled over to let him by.

Tony sat beside him as though in a dream. He still felt no pain. But he wondered if he was going to make it to the hospital in time. As his hand pressed the towel and drenched shirt against the wound, he could feel the pumping of his own blood. It felt to him as though his whole life's fluid was being emptied out through this hole. To his surprise, when he dared to look down, there was no sign of blood escaping onto the car seat. yet the pumping sensation continued and the harder he applied pressure to his arm, the more he felt that he was bleeding to death.

It didn't take long for the hospital to swing into action once he and Joe roared up to its door. It was a clean cut, clean for a chainsaw. The doctor said that usually they chewed up flesh pretty badly. Tony couldn't help but smile. He had only sharpened the chain the day before. Talk about a mixed blessing. He tried kidding with the doctor, stating he hoped the man had received top marks in sewing class. The physician assured Tony he had.

It took a long time to close the wound. First stitches inside his arm, then more, a lot more, outside to tie the skin together. When he thought the doctor must be just about finished, Tony looked for the first time. There was still about an inch to close.

Ministry snubs Haliburton

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

by: SHAWN HAGERMAN

EVERY SPRING and fall the Ministry of Tourism prints a large, glossy brochure promoting summer/winter tourism in Ontario. It goes in all the major Saturday papers in every large urban center from Thunder Bay to Windsor. The latest disgrace came dressed with an ominous green cover in my Toronto Star a couple of weeks ago. It was called "Our Summer Vacation" with the warning in small print on the back "The Ministry of Tourism & Recreation accepts no liability for errors or omissions".

This government publication without a doubt is the worst insult to anyone in Haliburton County who has ever depended upon tourism to make a living. No where can there be found any mention of the Highlands. The only saving grace is that the Central Ontario Travel Region [an area equivalent in land size to the state of Vermont] is also almost ignored. Central Ontario sits astride the great Canadian dream of cottage country, yet not a single Haliburton Highland resort is highlighted compared to 13 for Muskoka.

Valuable space is wasted promoting events such as "Cactus Festival" in Hamilton. Who in their right minds would want to drive to Hamilton in the summer for a Cactus Festival! There is no mention of such things as our County Fair or The Guild of Fine Arts or the Kinmount Fair, nothing! We are not on their map! As far as the Government of Ontario is concerned we don't even deserve a mention as a Tourism destination area.

I have talked to several tourist operators and their frustration is beyond belief. Calls to the ministry and COTA seem to bounce responsibility back and forth between themselves for this fiasco. It would be funny except in these economic times it is unforgivable. Jobs, businesses and homes are all on the line. This area needs the help of a proper Government publication. Someone at Queens Park better make Mr. North and his Tourism Ministry accountable for its errors and omissions. The people of this County are fed up with governments who take our money but ignore us when it comes time to build a school, a hospital or even put us on their own map in their summer guide of Cactus Festivals.

County tykes take bat at minor league

The Haliburton Indians, a team made up of Tyke age baseball players — ages ten and eleven — are vying to introduce that game of baseball to the Haliburton area at the minor league level. The Indians are participating in a newly formed Muskoka League that includes other centres such as Gravenhurst, Huntsville and Bracebridge.

After practicing religiously twice a week for the month of May and having the home opener rained out the week before, the Indians were anxious to take their game on the road — opening the regular season schedule in Bracebridge.

The Indians wasted little time getting things rolling as leadoff batter Greg Forgrave stroked a solid single and advanced to second as that ball was misplayed. The next batter, Brian Mulholland, walked, putting runners on first and second with nobody out. The Bracebridge pitcher managed to strikeout the next two Indian batters but got into trouble when Jamie Johnston singled, driving in Greg Forgrave and putting Indians on the corners.

The next batter for the Indians, Jason Henry walked, loading the bases for rightfielder Ryan O'Neill. O'Neill hit a slow grounder that was misplayed, allowing Brian Mulholland to score and leaving the bases full. The Bracebridge pitcher reached back and managed to get out of the inning with his third strikeout, limiting the Indians to two runs.

The Bracebridge team answered the Indian uprising in the first inning with three runs of their own despite some fine pitching from starting pitcher Greg Forgrave and excellent defensive play on the corner from Cole Glendinning.

The top of the second inning saw the Indian players Glendinning, Devon Dart and Forgrave go down in order. However the bottom of the inning proved to be quite productive for the Bracebridge team as they managed to score five times taking an eight to two lead.

Once again the Indians went to the attack scoring the maximum five runs allowed under the leagues rules. Crossing the plate was Brian Mulholland, Shane Flood, Jamie Johnston, Ryan O'Neill and John McMahon — closing the Bracebridge lead to just one run. Much to the dismay of the Indian players, the game began to slip away from their grasp as the Bracebridge team counted five more runs due largely to the inability of the Indian pitchers to find the strike zone.

The Haliburton club countered one more run in the fourth and twice more in the fifth, crossing the plate were Indian players Forgrave, Cam Neville and Henry. After five complete innings the score stood at Bracebridge 21 Indians 10.

The sixth inning proved to b uneventful as the Indians went down in order under the strength of some solid pitching by the opposition. Bracebridge players continued to pad their lead, scoring three more times.

At the top of the seventh inning the Indian players displayed the grit characteristic of these young players. Not willing to roll over to

by BRIAN RODNICK
Staff Reporter

The season is over for Haliburton Highlands Secondary School's track team, with eight of its athletes competing at the All Ontario Championships in Sudbury over the weekend.

This is the second time HHSS track coach Paul Morissette can remember sending eight athletes, who had to qualify at the regionals last week in Brockville.

Despite a good showing, the HHSS athletes came away empty handed. "They still did quite well, more than respectable," said Morissette, adding that all eight placed within the half top of the draw.

"They were competing against athletes who are at the top of the province. It wouldn't surprise me to see them at the Olympics next year," he said. "This has been one of our more successful seasons."

The eight provincial competitors were: Melanie Duchene, who competed in the senior girls discus; Bart Whiting, who ran the junior boys 100 metre; Chris Greenfield, who ran the junior boys 400 metre; Endres Weber, who competed in the junior boys pole vault; Andy Bacon, in the midget boys 200 metre and long jump; and Eric Johnson in the senior boys 400 metre hurdles.

Running in the junior boys relay were Greenfield, Weber, Bacon, Dave Carr and Corbie Kent.

Success at the stakes:

Local realtor puts money where his horse is...

by SUSAN CAMPBELL
Staff Reporter

BURIED SOMEWHERE deep in a stack of files at his home at Maple Lake is a letter which Gary Vasey received from county council not too long ago. The letter expressed the council's appreciation for the international exposure Vasey has given to the Haliburton Highlands.

Vasey, who was born and raised in the County, is an entrepreneur by instinct. His first career in teaching lasted just over a decade before he changed paths and became involved in real estate development in Haliburton County in the late 1960s.

Today Vasey is still in touch with the land, not only through real estate, but in the buying, breeding and raising of thoroughbred horses. And in keeping with his heritage, most of the horses bear the county's name or the names of lakes, towns and townships in this area.

Haliburton Huskie, Haliburton Native, Haliburton Forest, Kawagama, Kashaga, Little Kennisis, Paddy's Bay, Dysart, Lochlin, Minden Monarch — these are just some of the names of the fifty or more thoroughbreds Vasey has invested his time and money in since he got involved in the horse racing business in 1973.

Vasey is proud of his accomplishments, but he won't hide the sorrow that has often accompanied his joy, nor will he deny that success in the form of personal gratification has still at times come at extraordinary financial costs.

"It's a very crazy business," Vasey says. "It's frustrating to understand because all the principals that normally apply in business don't apply when it comes to horses — it's a risky, fragile industry."

For instance, last June he ran a two-year-old filly which he bought in Kentucky and named Haliburton Factor. The track was muddy and slippery and after only a quarter mile the horse fell, broke her leg and had to be put down.

"There are so many highs and lows in the business," Vasey says. "It's often said that it's the only business in the world you work hard losing money at. Ninety-five percent of the people lose money and only five percent win."

The average price of thoroughbreds selling in Toronto last September was between $30,000 and $50,000. Vasey doesn't take out insurance on his horses because he says it's just too expensive. But to minimize losses, partnerships are commonplace.

Such was the situation in 1989, when Vasey's brother and father joined financial forces to purchase a grandson of the late Northern Dancer from one of the best breeders in North America.

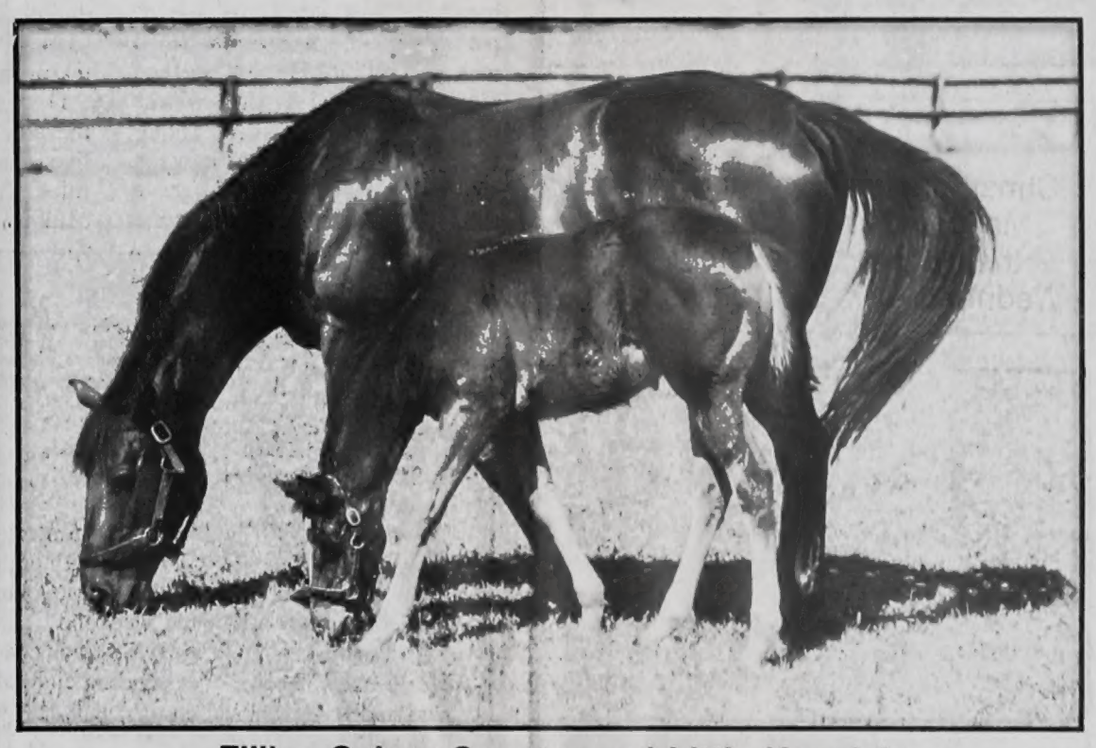
Looking back, Vasey suspects the horse was ill when they first bought it. After a few months of training, "Staanworth Court" developed a virus which turned into full blown pneumonia. The Vaseys sent the horse to a medical facility in Guelph where doctors drained 13 litres of fluid from its lungs.

It was determined later that the horse had two different types of cancer. Hence it could no longer compete and breeding was out of the question. It was especially disappointing for Vasey because this was the first time his father had been involved. Mark Vasey even named the horse after his place of residence in Minden.

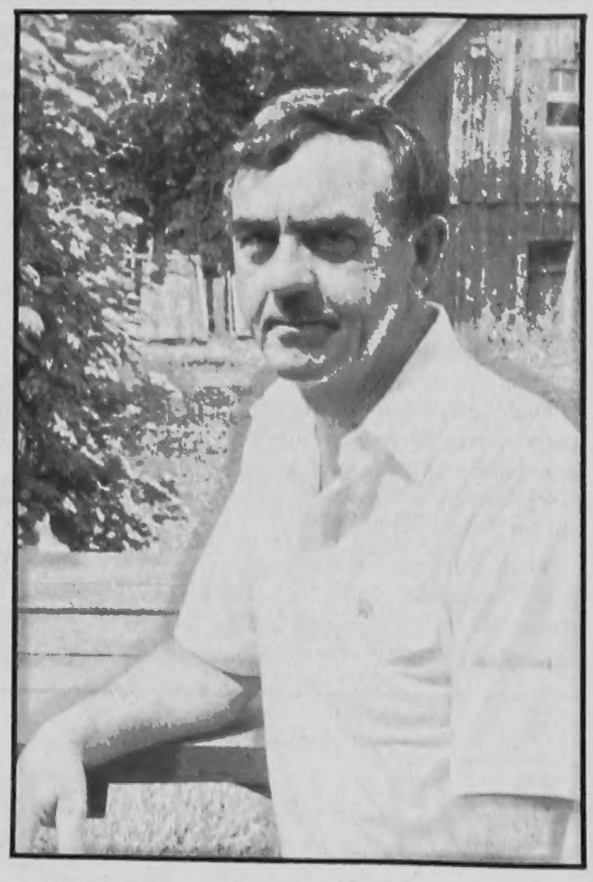
"There's no guarantee that if a horse has good breeding it will be the best horse in the race," says Vasey. "That's one of the reasons you can't treat it like an ordinary business." As he talks, Vasey hints at the real passion behind what he repeatedly calls the 'business' of thoroughbred horse racing.

"You cannot measure the heart — whether or not the horse has a big heart," he says with the intensity in his voice of all the years it has taken him to learn the tricks of the trade. The businessman image momentarily escapes him and it's unclear whether he is speaking quite literally about the physiological size of the heart or simply using it as a metaphor.

"They say thoroughbreds are bred to run, but the great ones, the stakes winners, have a burning desire to run — they're just all heart — they just don't want to be beat."



Fillies Geiger Counter and Little Kennisis



Local developer Gary Vasey

Vasey has headed off to the Kentucky Derby several times and travels to the heart of the industry in Lexington, Kentucky four or five times a year. "If you're going to be successful in the business you have to work at it," he says. "You have to go to where the centre of all knowledge is — and it's not in Haliburton or Toronto."

But that knowledge can go a far way when it's brought back home to Ontario. Vasey has often shipped mares down to the U.S. to have them bred with the best stallions he can find. And he has attended sales in Florida and Kentucky, even making his way to private farms, talking to managers, looking for that perfect match.

The bottom line in the business, says Vasey, is that everyone is looking for "the" horse, the one that will put you on top at the Kentucky Derby or the Queen's Plate. And it's not gambling, he insists. Or, at least, it's not the people who own the horses who ate the gamblers.

"People come up to me and ask me if my horse will win. How the hell do I know if it will win? The trainer doesn't even know if it will win. So all you tell them is that it's got a good shot."

But the real satisfaction in buying and racing horses is in being able to watch them run, says

Messiah hits high note with excited local singers

by SUSAN CAMPBELL
Staff Reporter

Hallelujah! Almost a hundred people have shown interest in singing with the Haliburton Messiah Choir which held its first rehearsal on Tuesday night.

"I'm delighted with the turnout," says Wayne Cooper, choir manager and a member of the Toronto Symphony's Mendelssohn Choir from 1981 to 1988.

"Messiah would not originally be sung by as many people, and it was originally performed by only about 30 men and boys," he says. A massive choral arrangement of Handel's classic emerged in the Victorian period (late 1800s) alongside the creation of the Victorian Choral Society.

Choir director Melissa Stephens was impressed with the ability of the sopranos who showed for Tuesday's practice. Most participants indicated a familiarity with the score and all had a good laugh during a difficult section of "Worthy is the Lamb" when Stephens told them, "it's not really as hard as it looks."

The Choir will be rehearsing every Thursday evening in June at St. George's church. These practices are not compulsory until full rehearsals begin September 3. Solo auditions will be held on July 29 and August 6.

The Haliburton Messiah Choir will perform on December 8 and 16 at the Royal Canadian Legion. Anyone interested in being a representative for his/her section or anyone still interested in joining the Choir is asked to contact Melissa Stephens or Bill Gliddon, the Choir's organist.

"This is very demanding work they're going to be doing," Cooper says of Stephens and Gliddon. "So we'll have to make sure we're good to them.

"We're looking at it now as a once in a lifetime thing for Haliburton County."

Having a laugh or two at Haliburton's annual Home and Vacation Show held this weekend were: left to right, David Schellenberg, Bob English and Connie Robinson working at J.D. Robinson Construction's exhibit booth. The show was enjoyed by all.

the opposition they bunched together a couple of walks, some timely hitting, and aggressive running on the base paths to score five times.

Final score was Bracebridge 24, Indians 15.

The Indians, loaded with rookie players, displayed some fine fielding plays and generated enough offence to win consistently at this level.

The Indians next game will be their home opener Sunday, June 9 at 11:00 a.m., hosting Gravenhurst at the Dysart Community Center ball diamond. Fans will be treated to doubleheader action as the Gravenhurst Bantam team will challenge the Haliburton Bantam squad at 1:00 p.m.

Owning horses a costly joy

Vasey. "I'm a deligent student of the game and I feel it's my duty to support a horse as much as you would a son or daughter."

Vasey has been to many races over the years where he has watched his horses cross the finish line first. In 1980, a five-year-old Kennisis won $114,000 in the Whimsical Stakes in Toronto and the Lady Mannequin in Cleveland.

And Haliburton Husky won the Bull Page Stakes, the Vandall Stakes and the Yearling Sales Stakes in 1982 totalling $135,000. Haliburton Forest was the greatest stakes winner and the most profitable for Vasey when in 1985 she won the Jammes Lovely Stakes at Greenwood for a total of $226,000 in prize money.

But just as it is for the horses in the race, Vasey says the business is no place for the meek or the weak at heart. "So many people thought they could get into the business, but you have to be able to suffer pain and go from the lowest depths humanly possible to the highest in short periods of time."

And perhaps the greatest challenge Vasey finds in the business is the fact that each horse has an equal chance of coming up a winner, regardless of breeding or bank account.

"There's just one track and if you're a little guy with one horse or five, you still compete with the big guys. When they reach the finish line, the horses don't know who their Daddy is." That may be so, but when the gates open, you can bet Gary Vasey knows which horses are his.

Neighbourliness needed

by BRIAN RODNICK
Staff Reporter

There are needy people in every community, both young and old, who can benefit greatly from a little human companionship. With this in mind, Haliburton County Home Support Services has proudly kicked off its Good Neighbour campaign.

The provincial government instituted the program last fall, in an effort to create public awareness of the needs of Ontario's elderly and shut-ins.

"Each community has its own special needs, and Good Neighbours gets people involved," said T. Phillip Adams, deputy minister of the Office for Senior Affairs. He was invited by the HCHSS to launch the campaign at its annual general meeting on Friday at the PineStone Inn.

The good neighbour campaign functions in two ways. It first identifies that each community has residents who need help; and secondly, it assures other residents that it's alright to lend a hand

"It never hurts to reach out, but some people may worry they'll be considered nosy," said Adams. "That's where the good neighbour campaign comes in. It assures people that it's OK to offer help."

Since last November, dozens of communities across Ontario have started their own campaign and no two are alike. "None of the programs were started using a Queen's Park cookie cutter," Adams said.

Describing a few examples: in Sudbury, students started a program to shovel snow for seniors; in Owen Sound the local press runs weekly stories highlighting a "good neighbour"; and in Newcastle the library delivers books to shut-ins, and a support group has been started for young mothers.

According to Adams, Haliburton County already has the necessary ingredients to instigate a successful good neighbour campaign; a caring community, filled with movers and shakers willing to get the job done.

Taking into account the size of the county, Adams suggested a local campaign could consist of using volunteer drivers to transport seniors. "But that's just a guess," he said, adding a telephone check system could be set-up for shut-ins.

"Any of these simple things can allow seniors, or any one, to remain in their own home...which is a very precious thing indeed."

To officially mark the start of the campaign, Adams presented a plaque to HCHSS President Adele Barnes, from Minister of Citizenship and Senior Affairs Elaine Ziemba.

OSAID drives meesage home

by ED WHITE
Staff Reporter

They don't even have driver's licenses yet, but they're already being told "drive safely, don't drive impaired."

At J. Douglas Hodgson school on Friday morning Ted O'Connell and two other members of Ontario Students Against Impaired Driving (OSAID) from HHSS told Grade 7 and 8 students "Don't get into a car with a person who's been drinking, it's just as bad as doing it yourself."

They awarded a $25 cheque to the winner of anti-drinking and driving poser competition which 30—40 Hodgson students entered.

The winner, Sarah Levis, says the competition was useful because it taught a lot of students that "it's a dumb mistake if you drink and drive."

Misty Bennett, one of the members of OSAID, says they are trying to reach students before they are dazzled by high school. "High School is such a shock. Everything is so different than elementary school. It's easy to forget to be careful."

Julie-Ann Adam, another member of the group, says the Grade 7 and 8 students are particularly vulnerable to the dangers of impaired driving when they enter Grade 9. "People think drinking is the thing to do. They don't realize the consequences."

O'Connell got the poster competition going by talking to Hodgson's principal and selling him on educating the children against drinking and driving.

Vice Principal David McKinlay says he is all for what OSAID is doing. "The sooner the students learn about drinking and driving the better." He hopes the Grade 8s from this year will join OSAID when they start high school next year.

This year OSAID had a booth at the HHSS homecoming, ran the coat checks at school dances, held a raffle, and circulated a newsletter to raise money and awareness for the group.

This summer two students will work distributing flyers, putting up posters, and perhaps running a car wash to get their "don't drink and drive" message to the public.

O'Connell hopes the campaign increases awareness of the dangers of drinking and driving, and brings more people into OSAID. "This year the group had trouble getting off the ground. We're all Grade 9 students, and there aren't many of us. We think this is a good thing to be done, and we hope more people join us next year."

BOE questions brushing

by BRIAN RODNICK
Staff Reporter

Concerns about the environment could hinder a proposed arrangement between the Haliburton County Board of Education and Sir Sandford Fleming College in Peterborough.

SSFC has asked if students in its Forest Management Course could clean up the brush near the college's cabins behind J. Douglas Hodgson Elementary in Haliburton.

At Tuesday's board meeting, trustees were concerned what this would entail. "What will they be taking out of there?" asked trustee Craig Pettit. Other trustees shared his concern and are worried trees would be cut down unnecessarily.

But Business Administrator Jim Bradley assured the board only scrub brush would be removed. "It's strictly a matter of cleaning it up," he said.

The board deferred a decision until Bradley has more information on the course.

Chainsaw needed full attention

His arm looked like two zippers. Then it was done and a dressing covered them. He was given a sling to keep the arm still and a prescription for pain pills.

Tony had to tell the story at least forty times over the next two days. That was almost as bad as having the accident itself. But two things really hit home every time he told the story. The first was that he should have had his full attention on the chainsaw that day. The second was that he would never, ever use a chainsaw without having another person present. He knew this time he had been lucky.

Dawn Brohman advocates help for those with learning disabilities

by MARTHA PERKINS
Editor

NOT LONG into the conversation, Dawn Brohman first uses the word advocate. It's a word she'll use frequently in the next hour, both as a verb and a noun: As a long-standing member of the Haliburton County Learning Disabilities Association, she advocates better understanding of these hidden handicaps. As a person who has learned that keeping silent doesn't make the problem go away, she is an advocate of people's rights for a responsive education.

"Parents have to support their child, keep their self-esteem intact and find something they're good at. They have to educate themselves and they have to advocate," she says, showing signs of the fighting spirit the board of education is quite familiar with.

It's a spirit which found its roots in her own learning disability. Once she joyfully discovered her problems at school weren't caused by stupidity, "every year at school got easier because I learned how to advocate."

Now, she's passed that talent on to her oldest son, Greg, a 16-year-old high school student. "Greg is an advocate for himself. He tells his teachers 'I can't write a math exam in 40 minutes' and now he can take all day. Whatever his problem is, he solves it himself. He's taken responsibility for himself, and that's a wonderful step to recognize you have a disability. You need some extra help but you're not embarrassed about it."

Thanks to Mrs. Brohman's role as an advocate, there is far less embarrassment and far more acceptance of learning disabilities. For years, inherent disabilities were often linked with intelligence, even though it is possible for a very smart person to be unable, for instance, to read.

When she was growing up, her difficulties with learning found her placed in a class with developmentally delayed students. Her very smart mother knew this wasn't the solution — and indeed, would probably make the problem worse — and took her out of school. For two years, young Dawn was patiently tutored at home by her mother.

Like many other people with learning disabilities, the young student developed coping skills. "There are so many ways of getting stuff into your brain. If you can figure it out, there's a fighting chance. People with learning disabilities know there's two ways to do everything and they don't give up. You're just not a quitter. . . Everything I did was hard. I just must have a drive of iron."

So despite her problems, young Dawn made it through public school and enrolled in university, studying psychology first to get her Bachelor of Arts, then her Masters.

Until this time, she never knew she had a learning disability; she never knew learning disabilities even existed. Each psychology student had to do a placement, and hers was in a class for children with special learning needs. As she watched them do their work, she became less detached and more excited. "I have all my scrapbooks from childhood and I took them to my professor and said 'I'm like these kids.' I kept thinking 'If I had ever had any of that (type of education), it would have been wonderful.'

"I was pretty excited to find out I wasn't stupid, but by that time all the scars are there. Before, I tried to hide (my problems) because I didn't want to be found out. It's an invisible handicap and you worry people won't accept it as legitimate. What years of torment."

It turns out Mrs. Brohman has dyscalcula, the numerical sister of dyslexia, which at first she also thought she had.

"Information slips in and out of my brain, I don't retain it. I might know eight times eight on Wednesday but it's not there Thursday."

Hard to describe, dyscalcula also distorts your

Ernice Warder was tops at teaching

by MARTHA PERKINS
Editor

SHE'S THE TYPE OF TEACHER everyone wishes they could have had at least one year in their lives: kind, thoughtful, compassionate and with an unshakeable belief in the inherent dignity of each and every child.

"Everybody has some worth and they have feelings," says Ernice Warder, now retired and living at Parklane Apartments. "I don't like to see children put down. I felt there is always something to work with.

"The thing is to make children with learning disabilities feel good about themselves. They're looked down on by too many people, even parents, who expect a child to do what he can't do."

Like Dawn Brohman, Mrs. Warder has a gentle voice which must have had the ability to calm a room. It's a voice you want to please, because it is so soft and honest. And with that voice, Mrs. Warder learned how to reach out to children who could not learn in the ways other children took for granted.

Not that it was easy, but then life never is.

Although she never knew it when she was growing up in Copper Cliff, outside Sudbury, "I had a learning disability. Up to Grade 7 and 8, I just got through on the skin of my teeth, but in high school, no problems.

Passing high school miraculously quickly and easily — she must have unconsciously developed skills to compensate for her disabilities — young Ernice enrolled in University of Toronto for two years. With the university's "letter of permission," she taught one year at Fort William and one year in Naughton, before marrying Bert Warder. With the arrival of Joseph, Jean (Neville) and Henry, Mrs. Warder took a hiatus from school and stayed at home.

Mr. Warder was older than his wife and died in 1963, when the oldest child, Joe, was 16, and Henry, the youngest, was six.

"I thought, 'I'm going to be raising three children and the thing to do is get me well established.' First, I wanted to be secure," Mrs. Warder says. After teaching a year at Boshkung, she realized she needed more financial security. The way to get that was to pack up the family and move to Peterborough for a year while she went to teacher's college.

How did she ever cope? "Oh, I had good kids. Everyone pitched in and we all worked together. They learned to take responsibility quite early."

Upon graduation, they moved back to Lochlin and Mrs. Warder got a job teaching the primary grades at Archie Stouffer Elementary School in Minden. In 1968, Principal Harold Morgan, who had a developmentally handicapped daughter, approached her with a novel idea: the school was going to start offering a special education class and would she be willing to assume authority? It meant spending three summers in Toronto to earn her special education certificate, but "it was a challenge and I loved children."

The class had quite a mixture of children, from Grades 1 to 8. Some had high IQs but their learning disabilities kept them from learning how to read. Some were developmentally handicapped, others had behavioural problem, perhaps because of family life, perhaps because of the frustration resulting from an undiagnosed disability. "Special education covers a wide scope. It's for any child who is not able to compete in the regular class."

With the children, Mrs. Warder learned as she went along. "Every child has something they can do" and the trick is discovering it.

In the early seventies, a Mrs. Dunn — Mrs. Warder can't remember her first name — had a child with special needs. It was agreed that every Wednesday afternoon, Mrs. Dunn would come in to teach crafts and Mrs. Warder would work one-on-one with her son at the back of the class.

"A learning disability is when there is a deficit," Mrs. Warder explains. "The child has above average ability but either with language or math, they need special teaching and you have to program for each individual child."

Even though she had children with emotional problems, "the children were far more responsible (than those in a regular class.) They didn't get into the same mischief because they wanted to work and they wanted to learn."

One little boy didn't get much tender, loving care at home. "The things that happen in the home affect the children at school" and Mrs. Warder knew when he had had a bad start to his day. "He might come in and over-turn a desk. I knew you just don't cross him. You have to give him a hug and tell him he can do (the difficult task at hand.) This is when you have to give them an extra boost, the extra they're not getting at home. You know some children are really hurting.

One hug went a long way for teacher

"You have to care and be able to love them all no matter what. You just have to try to fill the void and understand why they might be doing something. It isn't because they're being bad."

Later on, Mrs. Warder would teach in her classroom in the morning and be a resource teacher in the afternoon, taking children out of regular classrooms and spending time with them on any problems.

She also took the children on a lot of field trips, realizing many of them had never been more than a few miles from home. "These children had to get out in the world" and be exposed to different people, different lifestyles, and different ways of learning. With the parents volunteering to drive them, "we'd have a day away and eat the meals out so they'd know how to behave in a restaurant, read the menu and not just order a hamburger and french fries."

Eventually, "a little group of us" — Mrs. Warder, Gerry Feltham, Ted Reid, Jack Hill, Dawn Brohman and Nancy Picard — formed the Haliburton Association for Children and Adults with Learning Disabilities (now the Learning Disabilities Association.) They'd meet once a month at the high school "to get the parents coming out. It expanded with parents coming in to learn how to deal with their child's deficit."

To make up for the learning lost over the summer, the association started Camp Tall Pines. The Browndale group home on Twelve Mile Lake was called Tall Pines, and when Browndale folded, it let the association use the facilities.

"The first year it was all volunteers. The parents came and stayed to help. Minden kids came on certain days, and Haliburton kids came on certain days. We had Toos Reid as our swimming instructress."

To the children, camp was just fun. Unbeknownst to them, however, with all that fun they were also learning math and English, although certainly not in any ways they would recognize from a normal school.

For instance, each day it was some of the campers' responsibility to make lunch. To make it they had to have all the ingredients. To have all the ingredients they had to plan a menu and go grocery shopping, sticking within their budget. (There's one of the math lessons.)

After the first year, the association applied for and received a grant, enabling it to hire a supervisor, Marilyn Kinsman, and four counsellors. The staff was all high school students who were interested in helping children or were planning a career in education.

"Marilyn was a natural at it," Mrs. Warder says. Not only was she patient and good with the children, but she was organized enough to pull together all the pieces of running a camp, from interviewing the children, to driving around to schools to pick up scraps of paper and art supplies saved over the year. Lisa Malotte was one of the counsellors and took over from Marilyn. Dawn Brohman was also very involved with the camp, which eventually had to move to Victoria Street School. As well, "Marg Prentice was one of our mainstays all the way through summer camp. If you wanted anything you called Marg and she was too willing to help."

In the winter, the association started a swim program at the PineStone once a week. "It gave the kids something the other kids didn't have and they developed gross motor skills. You need gross motor skills for fine motor skills, such as writing. You need to co-ordinate in your mind how you're going to swim.

"It was marvellous to see the progression. I can still see two lads sitting on the edge of the pool, They wouldn't go in, they wouldn't go in. Finally they got them into the water and they learned how to swim."

Over the years, one of the greatest thrills for Mrs. Warder has been watching these children — now adults — graduate. "Oh, it's great. They're making something of themselves. It makes life worth while."

Mrs. Warder retired for health reasons in 1984, but when she looks back on those years, the love for the children hasn't diminished. "They need to be understood. They need so much but they give back a lot."

Now, with the award she is about to receive, society is giving back to Ernice Warder.

Easing a child's struggle to learn ability to judge the space around you. Mrs. Brohman can't read maps and has no real sense of direction. Driving through four lanes of traffic is something to be avoided. Backing into a tight parking space isn't recommended either.

But Mrs. Brohman has developed a highly accurate way of compensation: she guesstimates. Let's say she wants a porch 10 feet by 20 feet and the materials cost $15 a square foot. She won't be able to mathematically figure out the total cost, but she can say, "Oh, then that will cost about $3,000."

Learning what her problem was "was just like I had wings. There was a real reason and I wasn't alone and there were ways of coping with it."

And, she realized, she had the ability to help others cope with it.

"All my life I always felt strongly about people struggling, and I was the eldest of six children so I always loved children. It was very automatic that when someone was struggling, I would explain to them how to do it."

Just before she went to teacher's college, Mrs. Brohman had a "terrific job offer," which steered her on the course of social work instead. (After nine years of running a child enrichment program in her home, Mrs. Brohman is now an Adult Protective Services Worker, "advocating for the developmentally handicapped so they can live independently in the community.")

"The older I get," she says, her voice melodically gentle but with an undercurrent of inflexibility, "the bolder I feel about advocating for other people. I struggled so uselessly for so long. I like to open doors for people, especially if they want to help themselves."

By the mid-seventies, Mrs. Brohman was a young mother of two boys, moving to Haliburton with her husband Gary, who's now vice-principal of the high school. Both her sons have learning disabilities, and with her energy and dedication, others in the community recognized a worker when they saw one. Mrs. Brohman was soon signed up to be a founding member of the Haliburton Association for Children and Adults with Learning Disabilities — the name has changed over the years—, although she had to step down for a few years because of the demands of a young family. (For more details, please see the story on Ernice Warder.)

The group offered socializing programs, parent support groups, brought in high quality speakers and films — "now we're just down to the films" — and thought of ways to work with the school board to provide programs adapted to the children's needs.

When students return to school in September, the first weeks are spent doing review. With a learning disabled child, more information is lost and therefore more review is necessary. To help students retain more knowledge over the summer months, the group established Camp Tall Pines, which Mrs. Brohman co-ordinated for several years. (The camp has since disbanded, not out of lack of need, but because no one is willing to pick up the reigns after Mrs. Brohman "retired.")

One of the main goals of the camp was to make learning fun. Too often, the children's self-esteem has been battered by failures, but sometimes the same lesson just needs to be taught in a different way, a way the child can grasp.

Many parents add to the frustration by not recognizing the child's disabilities. An eight-year-old who can't read is called lazy. But Mrs. Brohman knows that "every child wants to do well and do what's asked of them and achieve. I don't believe any six or seven year old has problems with laziness. That's the time to push and ask what's wrong. Don't just accept 'He's a December child.' (Children born in December are in grades with children born in January, and therefore almost a year younger and less developed.)

"Give him a chance. Is there any other way to approach this?"

Current educational philosophy gravitates towards integration, taking children out of special education classes so they will appear less different than the others. But the child is different, Mrs. Brohman says, and needs that different, one-to-one learning atmosphere.

"Every child already knows you're different

Lifting away the veil of secrecy:

An glimpse inside Masonry

by MARTHA PERKINS
Editor

THERE'S A CERTAIN GRANDNESS, even hallowedness, to the large room. Plush drapes, two shades of blue, provide a warm backdrop to the pew-like benches lining the walls. At each end, stately, high-back chairs are adorned with medallions draped from neck sashes. Above them are round lights, with images of the moon and stars, while next to them are pictures with scenes seemingly from ancient Rome. From the centre of the room hangs the brass letter G, floating atop a centrepiece table with a Bible and other symbolic accoutrements.

To an outsider, walking into the Haliburton Masonic Lodge is like a non-believer walking into a Catholic church. The crucifix, icons and incense, which speak volumes to those who know the faith, can awe and yet make wary the uninitiated. The atmosphere is heavy with mysteriousness and history; when that history is not a shared one, the mystery is accompanied by suspicion. Just what does all this mean? What do they do with curtains drawn?

It doesn't help that in these modern times, such heavy dependence on symbolism is usually associated with one cult or another. Those lights with the stars and moon — does that mean their pagan worshippers of Mother Nature? The painting with the skull and crossbones — does that mean a sacrifice to the gods is made at the monthly meetings?

Because people fear what they do not know, last Wednesday night the North Entrance Lodge, No. 463, opened its doors to a rather surprised and curious public. The tour guide before people start arriving is Earl Cooper — without his familiar bagpipes and dressed in a sedate blue suit instead of a kilt.

"Freemasonry is derived from the temple builders of Renaissance time," Mr. Cooper begins at the beginning. As the stone masons developed their skills, they were allowed to join lodges. At first, all lodge members were "operative," that is they were active masons. Later on, when the rush of cathedral building was in decline, they allowed "speculative" members to join, men who weren't masons but were willing to learn the almost spiritual nature of masonry. "We take the tools and operations of builders and apply them to character building. It's a way of teaching, a way of life and morality. We're not teaching anything no one else is teaching, but it's just a different way."

Quoting from another source, he says "It's a beautiful system of morality, veiled in allegory and illustrated by symbols."

Faith is more important to a mason than religion. "We're a brotherhood of man under the fatherhood of God," Mr. Cooper says. Today there is more tolerance of other religions, but when the founding members of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons looked around them, they saw the strife religion can create.

"Back when the temple builders were building, there was so much dissention. They go (to Lodge) with a belief in God but they don't crowd you any further than that. Religion is not discussed. The moral teachings are there but they haven't gone into dividing into religions. [Muslim Lodges will have the Koran at the centre of the room instead of a Bible. The "G" hanging from the wall refers to God.]

"You have to acknowledge the higher power. If you don't, you're free to stay out."

Masons had to travel from job to job and thus developed a secret way of recognizing and accepting each other into their homes and lodges. In the "operative" times, this was the only secret. Over time, "Masons tended to keep their notions and ideas obscured and let them be known only to people who have been initiated." The line between what was secret and what was public also tended to be obscured and rather than risk crossing it, most Masons stay silent about the Lodge.

"What's upset a lot of people is that it seems so secret," says Mr. Cooper, a third generation Mason who feels more comfortable with the rules. "We're taught not to divulge certain things but people get worried about what to say so they tend not to say anything."

In one way, he's wary about the need for an openhouse. "A bane of nearly any organization is discussing it with someone who's not in it," he smiles, whether that's church, or work or masonry.

Other people worry that Masonry is a religion, while others are particularly upset there's no mention of Christ. (Indeed, accepting the crucifixion is not a requirement of becoming a Mason.)

"The Bible is central to Masonry. We base our legends on the building of King Solomon's temple (in the Old Testament, before Christ was born.) Having derived from temple building, we talk of building a temple of yourself. All those allegories have a teaching. It's in antiquity. A lot of the terminology derives from knights and chivalry and pageantry.

"It should ultimately lead to Christ but some people tend to stop (at Masonry.) It's enough like religion that they tend to substitute Masonry for religion. This is when a lot of religions are upset.

"Churchianity is sometimes more upset than Christianity," he gently smiles.

Mr. Cooper is a dedicated member of St. Andrew's Anglican Church in West Guilford. His Mathematics and Masons are linked faith plays an important role in his life and Masonry complements it. But Masonry offers something church doesn't: "There's a fellowship of man and man, that's sometimes downplayed a lot in society.

"It isn't everyone it appeals to in society. There's pageantry and ritual and archaic English and it's a fraternity. Ideally there's not supposed to be any dissention. You have to settle your differences and if you can't, either one or both of you don't come to lodge."

But first, more about the symbols.

Mathematics is an integral part of a mason's work. He has to know the physical rules behind a building's structure, and in this, a knowledge of math is essential. The Greek philosopher and mathematician Pythagoras was the first to develop a link between the two studies. The Cambridge Encyclopedia says "Pythagoreanism was first a way of life, of moral abstinence and purification, not solely a philosophy; its teaching included the doctrine of transmigration of souls between successive bodies. Pythagorean thought exerted considerable influence on Plato's doctrines."

Pythagoras also gave us a theorum we've named after him: in any right-angled triangle, the square on the hypotenuse is equal to the sum of the squares on the other two sides. The Babylonians who built King Solomon's temple knew this rule; Pythagoras put it in writing. "That's the dimension's of a carpenter's square. You can make the square and it's true. The lines are laid down for guidance; God has laid down a guidance for us and we can do better if we follow it than if we don't."

The well-known symbol of masonry is the square and compass, so important to builders and mathematicians. Then, from the buildings themselves, we get even more symbolism.

One of the paintings, or "charts", on the lodge wall shows a stone building with three pillars, which represent wisdom, strength and beauty. On one pillar is fancy carving: the lily work represents purity and the pomegranates plentifulness. The colour blue, so prominent in the room, connotes fidelity. Symbols, symbols everywhere.

In understanding Masonry, one must also put it in context of when it was formed, probably some time in the 1500s. People were much more attuned to the natural world, so it seems natural that the stars and moon float above the Grand Masters' chairs. "In our lecture we refer to the universe as the temple of the deity." As to the painting of the skull and crossbones, "there's a lesson about death. It teaches that death isn't the end of anything, that it's a part of life. God is part of all of that."

The fraternity of Lodge will disappear at the first sign of discord between members, which is why the Lodge is so careful about who it accepts.

"You're not asked to be a Mason," says Mr. Cooper. "You should not be asked to join. (Once you show interest), there has to be almost an unanimous vote to accept you; it takes two dissenting votes (to disallow) a member. The idea is you're supposed to have perfect friendship in there. We're talking about building with stones and there are some stones you just can't make fit in.

"To some people, the very fact that you restrict membership says, in effect, 'you're not good enough to be a Mason. But it's really meant that it's supposed to be a fellowship. . . The unanimity isn't there in anything else and that's why we disclude the discussion of religion and politics."

Just as a mason climbs the ladder of his trade, earning special distinctions along the way, Masons must graduate from one level to another by proving they have learned their lessons well and take them to heart. While not a service club, Masons are taught to "do the right thing" and that means helping their fellow man. Contributions from the Lodge have been numerous, complemented by the yearly donation to the cause chosen by the Order of the Eastern Star, the female counterpart to Masonry, although a separate entity.

"A Mason does the good act not for himself but for the others," Mr. Cooper says.

As Mr. Cooper says, Masonry is not for everyone (particularly women.) But for those who do find strength and guidance in the pillars of Masonic fraternity, it provides traditions worth keeping for the next centuries.

Masonry was formed some time in the 1500's when people were much more attuned to the natural world, which is why the moon and stars float above the Grand Masters' chairs.

Local chapter began near century's turn

ON OCTOBER 16, 1903, a group of men gathered in Haliburton to discuss the formation of a local Masonic Lodge. With the help of 20 "visiting brethren," eleven men were named officers of this new Lodge. The initiation fee was $25 and the annual dues for all members within a radius of 10 miles was $3 a year, and beyond that, $2 a year.

When the meeting closed at 9:50 p.m., the brethren were invited to a banquet at the Lucas House. Joining in the celebration was Dr. William Giles, the first Worshipful Master of North Entrance Lodge, No. 463, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons.

"Dr. Giles was born near Oshawa in 1858 and after he graduated from Trinity College in 1886, he began his practice in Haliburton," writes Ronald Curry in a 1980 history of the Haliburton Lodge. "A few years later he married a daughter of Douglas Kellett and they had a family of three boys and three girls.

"Dr. Giles took a very important part in the affairs of the community. He was Reeve of Dysart et al for 11 years. He was Warden of the Provisional County of Haliburton in 1897 and again in 1909. Because of failing health he returned to Oshawa and in 1913 moved to Pacific Avenue in Toronto where he died at the age of 63 years and was buried in the Evergreen Cemetery."

The first "Lodge" was the workshop of J. Worley, "a skilled cabinet maker and weaver. He was also sexton of the church and caretaker for the town hall. Their home was beyond this building. Both buildings had cedar shingles on the outer walls and roof."

In 1905, the Lodge rented a building from Dr. Giles (where Newbatt's Furniture and Appliances now is) for $36 a year. In September, 1913, the building was purchased for $300 (and sold 50 years later for $3,000.)

"On May 15, 1919, lodge room was dedicated by P.D.D.G. Fitzgerald and other Grand Lodge officers were announced and proceed to perform the ceremony of Dedication, after having been received with grand honours," writes the late Mr. Curry, who's father W.R. was also a Mason. "On the First Circumambulation the representative of Grand Lodge sprinkled a portion of corn upon the floor of the lodge. On the Second Circumambulation wine was poured on the floor, and on the Third, oil was poured on the floor, in conformity with the usages and customs of the craft."

By 1949, the Masons realized they'd need a new building and a committee was formed to look into the possibility of constructing a lodge. On October 21, 1953, the committee was authorized to "make a bid for the purchase of the land and buildings known as the former Presbyterian Church or Schofield property, to an amount of up to $2,000. At the next meeting on November 18 [Masons meet the Thursday on or before a full moon], the committee reported they had made an offer of $1,450 for the property which A.J. Schofield had left in his will to the Canadian Red Cross."

The building cost $17,500 and was dedicated on October 31, 1959, at the present day site.

The Grand Master gave the following charge: "My brethren, the ceremony in which we have been engaged should recall to our minds the principles upon which our institution is founded. We implore the Great Architect of the Universe to endue with us the wisdom to guide us in our works, and with strength to overcome our difficulties and temptations. We also ask Him to inspire us with the beauty of love and harmony. The hall is dedicated to Free Masonry; to impress upon us the duty of cultivating the great tenets upon which the craft is founded; to cause us to think seriously of the lessons which are taught in the ceremonies, on our duty to God and to our neighbour, to impel us to walk uprightly in our lives; and to strive in our own improvement and for the betterment of our fellow men that humanity at large may benefit from the cultivation of our fraternal feels and actions."

Of the 381 North Entrance Members from 1903 to 1980, 69 were "demitted", 27 were "suspended", 122 "passed to the Grand Lodge beyond", and 161 were present members. Today there are still about 160 members.

In the history of the Haliburton Lodge, Marjory Clark remembers her impressions as a young girl with a father who was a Mason. She graduated from Normal School in Peterborough and taught school in Port Dover. She married T.B. Barrett who became a Member of Parliament in 1945. She died on March 26, 1969.

She wrote:

The period between 1900 and 1903 saw the erection of two new saw mills in Haliburton, which of course meant an increase in the population of the village. Among these newcomers were several who belonged to the Masonic order, and they, with the Masons who were already there, decided to apply for a charter. This was granted and in due course North Entrance Lodge No. 463 was instituted, with William Giles, M.D., as Worshipful Master.

A framed photograph of the majority of members of that first lodge was a prized possession of Mr. J.A. Lucas and hung for years on his office wall. Dr. Giles was followed in office by Mr. Ralph Clark, who was Master again in 1907. Mr. Clark was engineer on the Lindsay Haliburton train. The year 1906 saw Mr. Sidney Johnston, mail clerk, as Worshipful Master. He played the piano and gave music lessons. In 1908 Mr. G.H. McBrien was Worshipful Master. That year my father, H.H. Clark, who was first Treasurer, became Secretary Treasurer, an office he held until his death in 1923.

In those days is office must have entailed the provision of refreshments for St. John's Night. As almost everyone made their own bread in those days (their own yeast too, for that matter) and the usual refreshments served at a social gathering was salmon sandwiches, an "extra baking" was necessary. As a consequence the bread was made and the sandwiches cut and spread at our house.

For a long time, because of this, we held the rather unorthodox view that this part — Saint's Day, was celebrated as a feast of salmon sandwiches in the night by the Masons. The only other things we knew about the Masons was that they rode a great — the one Masonic secret we were allowed to share.

The Mason's first Lodge Room was a house at the turn of the road behind the church, and beyond Mrs. Lane's house. This was another place familiar to us as very small children. The original owner of the place was Mr. Worley, sexton of the church and caretaker of the town hall. He was a skilled cabinet maker and most also have done weaving, for a small sign on his gate proclaimed J. Worley, Weaver. We were taken on walks to see Mrs. Worley, whom I can remember walking about on our lawn admiring the flowers in our garden. They seemed very old and were, I realize now, a quaint pair. What became of them? Did they die about this time that their house was available? At any rate it was Mr. Worley's house that the Masons of Haliburton commenced their activities.

North Entrance Lodge made their first ceremonial appearance in public at the funeral of Frank McIntyre's father. This entailed assembling at the Lodge Room and marching in full regalia through the village to the Methodist Church (it stood where the Red Cross Hospital now stands). Flags were at half-mast and the stores were clos-

What is a stroke?

A stroke results from an interruption in the blood supply to part of the brain. Without a continuous, adequate supply of oxygen-rich blood, nerve cells in that area cannot function properly. The nerve cells of the brain control the way we receive, interpret and respond to sensations and information, and most of our movements as well. If some nerve cells are unable to function, then the part of the body controlled by those nerves cannot function either. For example, a stroke may produce difficulty in speaking, inability to walk, or loss of memory.

What are the warning signs?

The primary one is sudden, dramatic weakness or numbness of the face, arm and/or leg on one side of the body, which usually lasts for only a few minutes. Others include:

- temporary loss of speech, or trouble in speaking or understanding speech
- temporary dimness or loss or vision, particularly in one eye
- sudden, severe, unusual headaches, or a change in the pattern of headaches.

If you experience any of these problems, tell someone and call for emergency help. Know the telephone number of your local emergency medical care service and use it!

The good news about stroke:

The best line of defence for any healthy person is an annual blood pressure check. Many strokes can be prevented if high blood pressure, a leading cause of stroke, is controlled through early diagnosis and prompt treatment.

In fact, stroke-related deaths have been decreasing, especially in recent years. Since 1980, deaths from stroke have declined by approximately five percent a year, largely due to the effective treatment of high blood pressure.

Today the outlook for every stroke patient is brighter because of the advances in diagnosis and medical treatment, as well as in improved rehabilitation.

For more information on stroke, contact your local office of the Heart and Stroke Foundation of Ontario.

ed. When they passed our house we were very much astonished to discover our father among them, wearing a beautiful blue leather apron and around his neck was a long blue ribbon, from each end of which hung a pen.

After the Stewarts moved to Bobcaygeon to live, the Newnham was occupied only as their summer home, the balls and parties and concerts which had made Haliburton such a gay and lively place, came to an end. The Kickapoo Indian Medicine Show, Uncle Tom's Cabin and a Magic Lantern Show were the only form of entertainment other than the local dances and card parties held in the Town Hall. The Masons sought to remedy this by bringing in high class entertainment from Toronto as a public service, being well satisfied if they broke even on their venture or even went a bit in the hole.

One of the first artists who honoured us with her presence was Miss Pauline Johnson.

This was a great event in our lives for we all had tickets and sat well up front. This year was likely 1904. For "The Song My Paddle Sings" Miss Johnson wore a magnificently beaded buckskin costume, her hair in braids on her shoulders, and a band with a feather in it around her head. And carried a paddle. Wearing the same costume she recited "Captive, is there a hell to him like this?" A taunt more galling than the "Huron's Hiss". Her eyes flashed, and she looked so fierce that we were a little frightened. For her other readings she came out on the stage looking very regal in a magnificent evening gown of rich pink satin. This time her hair was dressed high on her head. An evening we have never forgotten. If I remember correctly the hall was packed.

The Masons also sponsored Bengough, the famous cartoonist. His artistic skill, plus his ability to cartoon a local character or situation without giving offence, made him very popular. Two of them are still remembered after these many years. One concerned the Rev. John Lindsay, the Anglican clergyman, who wore whiskers in a style known as Dundreary, which were quite long but covered only the side of his face, leaving the lip and chin bare — an easy object to recognize. The second was Bill Barnum, the brakeman on the local train, depicted talking to a girl on the platform at Lochlin or Gelert, the train meanwhile steaming away and Ralph Clark looking out from the cabin of his engine with a very broad smile. not very funny by today's standards perhaps, but highly amusing to his audience. Mrs. Lindsay was delighted with the one of her husband, which one of his parishioners bought from the artist and presented to him. It hung on the wall of his study and we were invited in to look at it when we went for our music lessons. There were at least a dozen cartoons in all.

A comedian by the name of Will White, with a great variety of costumes parodying the English, Irish, Scotch, Dutch and Negro, sang, danced and recited for our enjoyment and was a great success. I suppose someone acted as chairman on these occasion. There may have been other entertainers who came, but these three I remember. Whoever came was the bet obtainable at the time, and we were one with the great world "out front" for one evening at least.

Plentiful flowers bring joy

WILBERFORCE NEWS
by: WINNIE SCHOFIELD

Wild flowers in the bush are treasures to be discovered and loved at this time. White and red trilliums are plentiful, growing alongside solomon seal, adder tongue, Jack in the pulpit and many more varieties. Over the years we have noticed the painted trillium and the lovely lady slipper disappear. There is a garden in Scarborough made beautiful with cultivated flowers. One section is set aside for wild flowers. These were purchased at great cost from a well known nursery. To acquire one Jack in the pulpit the price of $3 was paid. A single trillium could be had for $4. and the adder tongue were $8.50 each. So our bush flowers are valuable as food for the soul as well as money wise. We must protect and preserve them for the enjoyment of coming generations.

Ceramics, the art of baking and modeling in clay, has become a popular pastime, a way to develop artistic ability and to create individual expression through crafts.

Four days a week people interested in this hobby meet at the home of Flo Oram where they learn to clean green ware, removing basic mold seams then go on to decorate with their own design using paint, stain or glaze. Pupils produce cannisters, cup and saucers, garden ornaments etc. Some of the finished garden ornaments may be seen on the lawn of Joanne Hughey. Classes held in this art are on Mon., Tues., Wed. and Thurs. from 7 to 9 p.m. Those in attendance include people from Gooderham and from Paudash. Eva Linquert, and maker of beautiful dolls, provides the equipment for firing.

Eva and Flo are well known exhibitors at Bancroft and Buckhorn and Flo holds displays at Burlington and scarborough. Afternoon classes could be arranged. Call Flo Oram at 448-2283.

System adapts to help students and if you can acquire coping skills by being withdrawn from the regular class, the social stigma will be alleviated through your successes. Some kids just can't learn in a larger class.

"There's nothing like tutoring for learning disabled kids. That can take a kid miles — you're capable of learning, you're just learning a little differently. Let's solve the mystery."

Solving the mystery means accepting the problem. A student with dyscalcula is not going to remember the times table, no matter how many times they fail math. By the time they're in high school, teachers are no longer testing to make sure the student knows seven times eight is 56. So the student should be allowed the aid of a calculator. It's not cheating, it's speeding up a process which might otherwise take hours and take away from the learning of the lesson at hand.

On the point of adapting to the student's needs, Mrs. Brohman is adamant, the true advocate shining through.

"Schools will respond to whatever the ministry's directives are," she says. The ministry says each child has a right to an education and the system must do whatever it can to provide a suitable one. "Each school board's interpretation is different," she says wryly.

As long as her sons are in school, be that high school, university or college, Mrs. Brohman will keep advocating for their rights. When they get a job, she's less able to step in and provide guidance on how to adapt to their needs. By that time, however, there's little doubt they will have learned two important skills from her: how to walk proudly into the world and be an advocate.

Carpet bowlers use keen vision

Citizen Club joined the Haliburton County Community Games this year with an entry in the carpet bowling category. With ten teams competing the time allotted had to be increased and the games were well into the afternoon before the winners were announced.

Carpet bowling calls for a keen eye, accurate aim plus stamina. Hilda Clark and Myrna Haywood clinched third place leaving two well matched teams who had to play extra ends before the winners Margaret Harrison and Gerald Shackleton edged out George Grant and Jack Daniels. There were some tense moments right to the finish.

Legion Bingo games have moved from the Legion Hall to the Lloyd Watson Centre. Same wonderful people are running the show. There is now more space for more people every Monday evening, with games starting at 7:30.

Stan Sweet of Highland Grove was the lucky winner of the propane barbecue raffled by members of the Legion.

TO ALL THE FRIENDS who helped make my birthday such a happy time I send many thanks. I was overwhelmed with the kindness and thoughtfulness shown. It seemed as though everyone in Haliburton County sent a card. I wish to say thank you for the honour of a special dinner in my name on May 16th, a birthday gift from the Club, which has prospered for many years now. Also I thank people near and far who remembered my birthday with cards, gifts and the personal touch of visiting me at my home. After being shut in for Winter months seniors forget faces and names. I find a voice reminds me of some one but the name and often the face does not register too quickly. When people have gone somewhere else to live we get out of "touch". It has happened now with this Birthday. With names of people I used to know but have not seen for a long time. Once again thank you everybody. Mrs. May Croft.

God Bless, Charles Wise.

IN MEMORIAM

IN MEMORY of a dear mother and grandmother Marguerite Scott who passed away on June 7, 1987.
Wonderful memories woven in gold,
This is a picture we tenderly hold
Deep in our hearts, a memory is kept.
To love, to cherish, never to forget.
We mention your name
And speak of you often,
God bless you dear Mother & Grandmother.
You are not forgotten.
Sandra, Curry, Heidi, Billy.

SIMS, ELSIE — In loving memory of a dear mother who passed away June 7, 1989.
My love for you will always keep,
It cannot fade, it lies too deep,
The gate of memory never closed,
I miss you more than anyone knows.
No matter how I spend my days,
No matter what I do.
Before I close my eyes at night,
I'm always thinking of you.
Sadly missed and always remembered by Helen and Ross.
32-P-4

SIPE, LAURA — In memory of my dear mother who passed away June 4, 1990.
We cannot halt the hand of time,
Or live again the past.
Within our hearts are memories
That will forever last.
It broke our hearts to lose you,
But you didn't go alone,
For part of us went with you
The day God called you home.
Sadly missed and always remembered by daughter Kathy, Milt, & family.
32-B-4

SAWYER, BEV — In loving memory of my dear husband who passed away one year ago, June 3, 1990.
Beautiful memories are all I have left
Of a wonderful husband I will never forget
We shared our love, our hopes, our tears
Thank you Bev for those 28 years.
I lived in hope and prayed in vain
That God would make you well again
He took you home, we had to part
He eased your pain but broke my heart.
Only God knows how much I loved, respected and miss you.
Sheila
32-P-4

SAWYER, BEV — In loving memory of a dear son-in-law who passed away June 3, 1990.
There is a home not made by hands
Beyond its golden door
Awaits the one who's now away,
Not lost just gone before.
And in that home not made by hands
The master will prepare
A place for us and when he calls
We'll meet our loved ones there.
Sadly missed Muriel.
32-P-4

SAWYER, BEV — In loving memory of a very dear friend who passed away June 3, 1990.
God saw that you were tired
And a cure was not to be
So he wrapped you in his loving arms
And whispered "come to me"
You suffered much in silence
Your spirit did not bend.
You focused your pain with courage
Until the very end.
You tried so much to stay with us
Our loss became your gain
God took you in his loving arms
And saved you from all pain.
Sadly missed, Richard.
32-P-4

HOBDEN, JOHN MILTON — In memory of my beloved husband who passed away May 31, 1990.
In the woods
The lilies are blooming
The lilacs by the house on the hill
I miss you my darling companion
And know that I always will.
Lovingly remembered, Betty.
32-B-4

DEAN, GEORGE — In memory of a dear husband and father, who passed away June 3, 1990.
A page in our book of memories
Silently turns today.
Every remembered by Wife Laura and Daughter Lorraine.
32-P-4

SIMS, ELSIE (Toots) — In loving memory of a dear mother who passed away June 7, 1989.
Gone is the face we loved so dear,
Silent is the voice we loved to hear,
Too far away for sight or speech,
But not too far for thoughts to reach,
Sweet to remember her who was here,
Who gone away is just as dear.
It's been two years since your passing Mom. The pain is still as great.
Enormously missed and greatly loved.
Shirley, Sandy and Terry.
